

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

NOTE.—The first Jacob van Doorn above named signed his name "Van dorn," thus shortening the name to agree with its pronunciation in English. His son, Jacob, and descendants, continued the spelling. Another of his sons, Abraham (Sheriff of Somerset Co.), followed the same spelling, but the descendants of his son Abraham (the only one traceable), changed the name to Van Doren, so that the descendants of Christian and Abraham became Van Dorens, and those of Jacob, Van Dorns.

SUCCEEDING GENERATIONS.

PREFACE.

The VAN DOORN family has existed under this precise name, and with this spelling, in the Netherlands for at least eight hundred and fifty years. Under that name some of its members came to America in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries, and there also came some who, before or after their arrival, dropped the "van." As the first following pages of Part I show, there became variations in the spelling in the Netherlands during the latter part of the Middle Ages, but certain leading branches of the family never departed from it, nor have they to this day. It is a pity that the American descendants of these worthy Hollanders consented to change to Van Dorn, Van Doren, Van Doran, Dorn, etc., but nearly all of them did, excepting the branch known as "The Rhode Island Line."

This work, the result of years of correspondence and searches and personal inquiries, tabulates about 7,548 persons who have resided, or are at present living, in America, bearing the name of, or the various names derived from "van Doorn," or descended from them and bearing other surnames. Also 2,490 who intermarried. Total names given, 9,948.

Dates and names have been obtained from so many sources, often contradictory, that it is not to be expected they will be found in every instances to be absolutely correct. Bible records frequently differ from tombstone records, and different members of a family send dates at variance with other dates; this is one of the difficulties of insuring correctness. But the author has done his best to secure as much accuracy as possible.

The usual arrangement of names in the genealogical portion of this work is intended to be strictly alphabetical, first as to Christian names, and then as to middle names. In a few cases there may be found a slight departure from the rule, because of names coming in late, and a strict adherence to it would affect the cross-references. The idea of an alphabetical arrangement, which practically makes of the work an encyclopedia, was first suggested by the author of the "Corwin Genealogy," which, so far as known, has been followed by no one else, except by the present author himself in a previous genealogical work, entitled "Joannes Nevius and His Descendants." This arrangement is intended to make reference to all V. D. names as easy as possible, and renders unnecessary a voluminous Index.

Extra care has been taken to obtain proper spellings of surnames and Christian names, and to include full middle names; but the illegibility of handwriting on records and in correspondence has undoubtedly led to some errors.

Probably most of our V. D. readers will be surprised to find how many others there are of the same Christian names as themselves. For examples, they will discover that there are repeated in the Line of Jacob of Monmouth these first names: William, repeated 134 times; Maria (Mary), 129 times; John, 122 times; Sarah, 70 times; Catherine (with variations), 64 times; Ann (with variations), 63 times; Abraham, or Abram, 61 times; Jacob, 59 times; Elizabeth, or Eliza, 53 times; Isaac, 46 times; Joseph, 34 times, etc. There are not such special repetitions of names in the lines of Cornelius or Anthony.

In looking up a particular name it should be noted that a supposed "Catherine" may be found under a "Katherine," an "Abraham" under an "Abram," a "Johanna" under a "Joanna," a "Nellie" under an "Eleanor," or vice versa. The common Christian name of a person is not always the real baptismal name.

The illustrations are sometimes faint or inartistic, owing to the fact that many of them are from faded daguerreotypes or ambrotypes, or poor carte de visites, but even when so the reproductions must prove of permanent future interest.

Perhaps it should also be noted that many of the addresses of living persons named in this work are of former rather than present residences, but all such are printed according to the latest, or only report of them received by the author.

Additional data, if forwarded by our readers after publication, will probably be used in the makeup of a supplementary pamphlet, to be published at a future date.

The labor of the preparation of any historico-genealogical work, especially of a family so large as that treated in this volume, involves the most patient industry, careful study, and a wider correspondence than any other form of literary work. Except for the interest of blood, the author would have paused in his investigations long ago from sheer weariness. He did so, in fact, about twelve years since, and turned his manuscript over for completion to another gentleman. That gentleman, however, being unable to complete the task so undertaken, the present author again took it in hand, and for the past three years has used every spare moment, night and day, to complete the record. It is not yet completed, nor would it be if the labor were continued for another decade; the chief reason, however, being that hundreds of inquiries which have remained unanswered would still not be answered, owing to the indifference of various scattered members of the family, who have lost family interest and pride. However, on the whole, I know of no old Dutch family whose love and pride of ancestry are greater than pertain to the descendants of the van Doorns.

The author mourns the loss of some of the best members of the older stock, who took a great deal of interest in the preparation of this record at its inception about twenty years ago, and since. They will not be able to see with their own eyes these printed pages, but it is hoped the living members of the families represented will not be unappreciative readers.

The Revolutionary War records, printed in connection with the names of various persons who served in that War, were kindly furnished to me from the Adjutant-General's Department, at Trenton.

Heartiest thanks are due to all those who have taken the pains to render valuable assistance in perfecting this record. They are too numerous to be mentioned here.

Of course, there will be regret that the ancestors of the three American lines herein traced have not been connected through at least a few preceding generations in the Netherlands. But the branches of the family in Holland are numerous and large, and to effectuate this desirable result an examination would need to be made of hundreds of church records and all city archives in the Netherlands. The expense to be entailed would amount to several thousand dollars. If some member of the American branches of the general family desires to do this in the future, the way is open.

FRONTISPICE COAT-OF-ARMS.

The "Utrecht" coat-of-arms, reproduced as the frontispiece to this volume, is printed in colors from five blocks, made after a carefully prepared drawing by Miss Charlotte A. Van Doren, of 647 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C. Miss Van Doren can furnish pen-and-ink copies, or copies in water colors, if applied to.

“THE HONOR APOSTOLIC ROLL.”

NOTE.—The following list embraces those mentioned in this volume who are known to have had twelve or more children. Very many more have had families of ten or eleven children.

The number succeeding the name indicates where the person may be found under the alphabetical arrangement in this work, or in an Appendix. The next succeeding number is that of the year of death.

Those who attained the age of eighty years or more, will be found enumerated in Appendix XIII, and are designated the “Family Patriarchs,” although this designation might well be applied to those in this list.

HISTORICAL: THE EARLY VAN DOORNS.

- I. General—In Holland and America.
- II. Jacob van Doorn, of Monmouth Co., N. J., and Family.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTORY.

As early as 1088, or more than eight hundred years ago, the name "van Doorn" was in use in Holland, and, although there were variations in the spelling to a slight extent during the Middle Ages, that form of the name is more general to-day in the Netherlands than any other.

The remote Holland family of the name of van Doorn divided into various branches, but were located chiefly in the province of Brabant and Utrecht. Many members of the family early rose to distinction, were honored as part of the "nobility," and possessed coats-of-arms. Some of these went into Belgium, when that country was a part of the Netherlands; a very few went to France and to Germany. The great bulk of the stock always remained sturdily Dutch.

The American members of the family, outside of a few quite recent immigrants, (whose lines, where known, appear in an Appendix), may be said to be wholly derived from three Holland ancestors, none of them closely related to each other so far as we know. They were:

1. Pieter van Doorn, of Gowanus, L. I., who came to America from Gravezande, Holland, prior to 1659; the date of his migration cannot be ascertained. So far as known he had only one son, Jacob, who settled near Hillsdale, Monmouth Co., N. J., about 1698, and was one of the leading farmers of that section, possessed of 676 acres of fine land. He married Marritje (Maria) Bennet, and had ten children, all of whom, except two, raised families. The descendants of this Jacob spell the name in two ways, Van Dorn and Van Doren.

2. Diedlof Doorn (undoubtedly as to his Holland stock a van Doorn), appears on the New York City records in 1680, but the date of his coming from the Netherlands, or the place of his nativity, is unknown. He had two sons, Diedlof and Cornelius Doorn. Of Diedlof (2nd) there is no further trace. Cornelius settled in Monmouth Co., N. J., soon after Jacob, the son of Pieter. He had a large farm at Middletown, a few miles only from the farm of Jacob. Cornelius had at least eight children, including four sons, probably all of whom raised families. On the Monmouth records of baptisms Cornelius was universally written "Cornelius van Doorn," whether because overshadowed by his earlier neighbor and more pronounced churchman, Jacob van Doorn, or because the pastor of his church knew that that was his real family name, cannot now be told. Cornelius himself wrote his name to his will (the only instance where I have come across his autograph) "Dooren." In the process of time the most of his descendants spelled the surname "Dorn," and do at the present day. The name "Dorn" being such a common one in this country, as derived from Irish or German lines of ancestry, the writer has found it impossible to trace out the descendants of Cornelius where the name was "Dorn." However, it so happened that three of the grandchildren of Cornelius (sons of Cornelius' son Nicholas), who resided at Middletown, restored the "van" to the name, and used the surname "Van Dorn." Their descendants I have been able to get hold of with certainty, and their lines are carried down, for the most part, to the present time, in Part III. of this work.

3. Anthony van Doorn, of Rio Berbice, British Guiana, son of Moses van Doorn of the same place (the latter probably being born in Holland; certainly his parents were), came to Rhode Island about the year 1756, and then married Ruth Ingraham. While he returned to British Guiana and died there, those of his fourteen children who grew up generally remained in Rhode Island, or in New England, and their families and descendants, numbering several hundreds of the name of Van Doorn, constitute what is generally spoken of as "The Rhode Island line of Van Doorns." These descendants appear in Part IV of this work.

Each of the three general branches above named has given to our country some men of more or less distinction. For example:

The line of Jacob van Doorn contains the names of General Earl Van Dorn of the Confederate Army; Rev. Dr. William Howard Van Doren, of Chicago; Rev. Luther Halsey Van Doren, of Freehold; Rev. William T. Van Doren, missionary to Jaffa; Dr. Matthew D. Van Doren, of New York City; Rev. DeWitt Talmage Van Doren, of Norwalk, Conn.; Rev. David K. Van Doren, of Schodack Landing, N. Y.; former Vice-Chancellor Abraham V. VanFleet, of New Jersey; Rev. Dr. Noah Schenck, of Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. Charles S. Hegeman, of Nyack, N. Y.; Rev. Samuel Miller Hegeman, of Brooklyn, N. Y., poet; Colonel William Thomson, lawyer, of Somerville, N. J.; Hon. Clement Sullivane, of Maryland; ex-Attorney-General Thomas M. Miller, of New Orleans, La.; Rev. John Newton, father and son of the same name, both missionaries to India; Judge Peter Vredenburgh, of Freehold; Hon. John Jeroloman, of New York City; Rev. Dr. John P. Knox, of Newton, L. I.; Hon. Daniel P. Van Dorn, of Freehold, N. J.; Hon. John F. Hageman, of Princeton, N. J.; the Drs. Hedges, of Plainfield, N. J., and many others.

The line of Diedlof Doorn contains the names of James H. Van Dorn, head of the Van Dorn Iron Works, of Cleveland, O.; Cleveland Van Dorn, of Fenton, Mich., the educator; Hendrick Wilson, the Revolutionary patriot of Somerset Co., N. J., who intermarried in the family and whose history in connection with the Revolution is of the most interesting character, etc.

The line of Anthony van Doorn contains the names of Captain William P. Van Doorn, of Canaan, O., who served with great honor in the Civil War; Dr. John W. Van Doorn, of Cleveland, O., etc.

The beginnings of all these lines in America were humble. None of the early forefathers were, so far as I know, highly educated. All were strong in religious faith and in character. They were of such as make the bone and sinew of our great country.

Generally speaking, every present "Van Doorn" is descended from Anthony of Rhode Island or is a late-comer from Holland; every "Van Doren" is descended from Jacob, of Monmouth Co., N. J.; every "Van Dorn" is descended either from Jacob, or Cornelius, of Monmouth Co., N. J.

The chief physical characteristics of our early van Doorn ancestors in New Jersey—I have less knowledge of the Rhode Island line—were tall stature and a florid complexion. Add to this great energy and deep piety, and we have a pen-portrait of nearly all their descendants. These characteristics predominated for several generations. The early Van Dorns and Van Dorens were also usually farmers, and yet had the grit to keep well at the front in the race of our forefathers for new lands toward the setting sun. So we find them pushing, by 1723, from Monmouth county to Somerset county, and a little later to the adjoining counties; then, before 1800, to the "Indian Country" in New York; then to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota, Iowa, and the states further west. They have in fact been among the most self-sacrificing of pioneers in the development of the great West. Only a careful study of the successive residences, or life-sketches, of the persons named in this work, will reveal how much the states west of the Allegheny Mountains owe to the hustling and daring activities of the Van Dorns and Van Dorens, and to some extent of the Van Doorns, between the years 1800 and 1850.

CHAPTER II.

THE HOLLAND VAN DOORNS.

The VAN DOORN name and blood are pure Dutch. However descendants now spell this name, whether with or without the van, the "Doorn" and its derivatives bespeak their Netherland origin.

To-day, in the Netherlands, the various families of the name, which are large, spell it, with few exceptions, van Doorn. This name was full-fledged in the Eleventh century, but between that and the Sixteenth century the name came to be written (the prefix van being generally used) Deurn, Doern, Dorn, Doirne, Doorne, Doornen, Deuren, Doiren, and Doren. About the latter date, however, there is said to have been a more general acquiescence in the use of the original name, van Doorn, and so it continues to the present. However, there are still families in different parts of Holland, members of whom spell the name in the various forms above stated.

The nobility of Holland, to which many of the early van Doorns belonged, and which still includes some of the name, never recognized anything as the true name but van Doorn, and van der Doorn. They have always adhered to that spelling with wonderful tenacity. They take a just pride in the name, and well they may, for there is no more honorable one to-day at The Hague, or at the court of Holland. The earliest recorded person of the name, whom I have been able to discover, was STEPHEN VAN DOORN, High Sheriff of the Margravate of Antwerp (then part of the "Holy Roman Empire") in 1088, under Godfrey de Bouillon, the most noted of the Margraves of that city. Godfrey was appointed Margrave by Henry IV. in 1076, with the title of the Duke of Lorraine. Antwerp belonged to the Duchy of Brabant, and was in the Netherlands (in fact it remained in the Netherlands, generally speaking, until 1830). Godfrey led an army of Crusaders, said to consist of 90,000 men, toward Jerusalem in 1096, and in 1099 captured that city, whereupon the Crusaders elected him "King of Jerusalem." He did not accept the title, but became Lord of the city, and ruled it with vigor and success until his death, in 1100. The body of Godfrey was buried in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem. Godfrey was born in Baissy.

The office of Sheriff in that day was one of the leading offices at the disposal of the Margrave, and it is reasonable to assume that Stephen van Doorn was a man of high character and real executive ability. Whether Stephen accompanied Godfrey or not in his Holy Land Crusade we do not know.

For the next two centuries, the name van Doorn frequently occurs in North Brabant, and the presumption is that the families then found there had a direct connection with Stephen van Doorn.

In the Thirteenth century the capital of North Brabant, Bois-le-Duc, had among its sheriffs a continual line of van Doorns, one of whom, John van Doorn, was a nobleman under Johanna, Duchess of Brabant. He became located at Vorde, Belgium, then part of the Netherlands.

On Mar. 1, 1335, Govert van Doorn was given the seignory (meaning that he was made Lord) of Doirne, or Deurne, in Peelland, North Brabant, which remained in possession of his descendants for about two hundred and fifty years. The similarity of the name of the town and of Govert van Doorn will be noticed. It may easily be that Doirne, which in lapse of time has become Deurne, took its name as the seat of a seignory from Govert's last name. I judge the more modern form of the name to be the Flemish one, Deurie being on the boundaries of the territory of those speaking the Flemish tongue.

At the present time, the van Doorns in Holland, who claim to be of "the best stock," (as the author knows from conversation with some of them), trace back their ancestors either to what they call (1) the de Peelland stock, which traces itself to Deurne, when under the lordship of their ancestor, Govert van Doorn; and to Doorn in the province of Utrecht, forty-five miles northwest of Deurne; or (2) to the Zeeland stock, which was doubtless a branch of the Peelland stock. There is also a north Holland stock. I believe the Peelland stock to be the original of all the present van Doorns, but the fact is uncertain.

I have not been able to visit Deurne, it being much off the beaten track in Holland. In 1907 I went to Doorn, an account of which may interest my readers.

THE TOWN OF DOORN.

What is known of the Utrecht family line points to an early habitation at or near Doorn, a small but beautiful town, about eleven miles southeast of Utrecht. Taking the train at Amsterdam and changing at Utrecht, a short run of about six miles brought me to Driebergen. There, at the station, was a steam tram running to Doorn, and beyond; it consisted of a small locomotive and two street railway cars. Doorn is about three and one-half miles from Driebergen, and the roadway to it is by handsome grounds and residences, with an abundance of lawns, old trees, deep forests, and a wealth of flowers.

The main street of Doorn is heavily shaded. Vitrified brick forms most of the roadway, not only through the town but on the way to Driebergen. It is needless to say the streets are scrupulously clean. The town consists chiefly of two parallel streets, the main one, and another to the north of it, and it has a few cross-streets. The population consists of about 1,200 souls.

There is one very old house at Doorn, with several of its stories in the roof; and a Dutch church of the Fourteenth century; and then, in the outskirts, the ancient "House of Doorn." All the other residences looked modern, and must have supplanted the former old mansions, for Doorn is a town too old to have its beginnings dated.

Naturally, I first turned my attention to the Dutch church. It looked to be of the Fifteenth century; I afterward learned that it was of the Fourteenth and has been little changed. It had a tower with a clock in it, on which was in plain figures "1689." The church stands beside the main street, has galleries, and will seat about 250 persons. It is a plain, very antique looking, brick structure, and within has the usual uncushioned pews and simple interior of all Holland churches. It is surrounded by tall trees. Near the church is an elegant new schoolhouse.

I then went to the two hotels, also near each other, one kept by a widow Blaubenstein, and the other by a van Dijk—the same name as our Van Dyck. At one of them I had an excellent meal.

Noticing the names on the few shops of the street—which were of the usual variety—I read those of van Nelle, van Crevel, van der Baan, van Ginkel: evidently the "vans" are not giving out.

The name of the main street is Dorpsstraat. Ivy on the houses, flowers everywhere (roses, geraniums and honeysuckles predominating), velvety grass on all lawns, all buildings in perfect order and in fine architectural taste: these constitute a picture that is winning to the stranger, and makes one feel that it must be the abode of a happy and wealthy people. There were no evidences of poverty at Doorn. There were electric lights, and nearly all residences had front yards, rear gardens and plenty of room.

The name I found to be pronounced, as it must always have been,

Dorn, not Doorn. This accounts at once for the Americanizing of van Doorn to Van Dorn and Van Doren. I took special pains to ask concerning this point.

On the outskirts are picnic-grounds and lovely beech woods; in fact, this whole part of Holland has a wealth of beech and linden and similar trees, and is one vast and charming park.

Adjoining the town proper is a large estate, the fine residence on which is known as the "House of Doorn." It is now owned by a Mr. Heemstra. The building is said to have been erected about the year 1500. A picture of this house appears on the opposite page. The grounds around it are full of fine old trees.

Other views of Doorn are given herewith to show the beauty of the location, but they fail to do justice to the original.

We know from the armorial books of Holland that there were van Doorns who resided at Doorn in the earlier centuries, but inquiry failed to find an inhabitant of that name there at the present time.

BARON VAN DOORN DE WESTCAPELLE.

The late Baron van Doorn de Westcapelle belonged to the Zeeland family. Zeeland is a province consisting of nine islands between the mouths of the Rhine, and has for its chief towns Flushing and Middleberg. The Baron's grandfather, Abraham van Doorn, was born at Essequebo, British Guiana, on June 17, 1760, and undoubtedly was a relative, if not a brother, of the Anthony van Doorn who was born in British Guiana in 1736, and founded the Rhode Island line of van Doorns. This Abraham became Alderman and Sheriff of Flushing; then Member of the Legislature; then Sheriff of the province of Zeeland, under King Louis Napoleon, and Counsellor of State. He died May 30, 1814.

His son, Hendrick Jacob van Doorn, of Westcapelle, was born at Flushing, Aug. 23, 1786, and became one of the noted statesmen of Holland. He graduated at Leyden University, Jan. 31, 1807, and in March of the same year was elected State Auditor by the Council of State. He rapidly rose, filled various state positions, and, in 1818, the King (William I.) nominated him for Governor of Zeeland. He served there until 1826, when he was transferred to East Flanders. On Oct. 4, 1830, he became an ad interim Minister of the Interior, and on Dec. 29, 1831, full Minister of the Interior. On the accession of William II. (1840) he was elected Vice-President of the Council of State, which position he filled until Mar. 26, 1848, when he asked for and obtained an honorable discharge from those duties. The King, however, placing great value on his integrity and judgment, conferred on him the two honorary posts of Lord Chamberlain and Chief Marshall. He married twice: (1) Petronella Johanna Schorer and (2) Johanna Martha Maria van der Heim. He died at The Hague, Jan. 18, 1853.

This Hendrick Jacob van Doorn was raised to the nobility with the title of Baron by royal decree of July 4, 1829, and diploma of July 14, 1830. His coat-of-arms is a beautiful one when colored, and contains the motto: "Do good and do not look around."

At the same time that Hendrick Jacob was raised to the nobility, his brother, Anthony Pieter van Doorn, was also so raised. He was born March, 1791; died May 11, 1870; married Anna Elizabeth Becius. By a slightly later decree his sister, Petronella van Doorn, was also elevated to the nobility; so that three different persons in the same family were shown this mark of distinction by the same King. The coats-of-arms of the various members of this family may all be seen beautifully illuminated in the three volumes of "Gen. Kwart van Nederland Geslachten," published at The Hague 1868-'73, by C. Van Doorn & Zoon; who, by the way, were enthusiastic and energetic van Doorns in their day, and the best known publishers at The Hague.

The late Baron van Doorn, of The Hague, who died Sept. 21, 1893, was a son of Baron Hendrick Jacob. He was a singularly fine, modest and Christian gentleman, whom it was a pleasure to know, if only in a transitory way; and perhaps it may interest some of my readers to tell how it happened that I became acquainted with him.

In 1873 Rev. Dr. William H. Van Doren of Chicago, a relative of the author, wrote as follows concerning his call upon this Baron at The Hague, which had occurred in the year 1855: ("Our Home," p. 313): "Three generations since a van Doorn emigrated to the Dutch Demarara, and, by raising coffee, had amassed a large fortune. He gave his son a splendid education, which, having finished, he studied law. But, possessing a fine inheritance, it was not desirable for him to practice, and he naturally became fond of politics. The human mind has its wants, as clearly defined as hunger or thirst. And the interests of government are a sea of excitement, amid whose billows dazzling with foam many a noble youth gladly dashes. Thus he rose from one office to another until he became Prime Minister. How many years he held the seals I know not, but at length he died, and left his son filling the office of Lord Chamberlain to the King. This young man was twenty-eight years of age in 1856, and was married to a titled lady of Westphalia. His card bears the name of 'Baron de Westphalia.'" [An error; it was Westcapelle.] "I presume the young nobleman must have been partial to good ham, that section having become as famous for its ham as Goshen for butter. All I know of the wife is the statement of her husband that she was a very accomplished lady, and had been educated in a London boarding-school. At the time of my visit she was an invalid, and thus I was prevented the only chance I ever approached of receiving the hospitality of a nobleman. A small palace adjoining the Baron's was occupied by a sister of the King."

The year after this narration, happening to be at The Hague, I determined, if possible, to find out if this Lord Chamberlain and Baron was still living. A brief and rather carelessly written diary kept at that time thus states what occurred, under date of Aug. 19, 1874:

"Mr. van der Velden gave me a card of introduction to Baron van Doorn at 25 Voorhout. It is a pleasant residence where he lives, and I met an unexpectedly warm reception therein. Ringing the bell, a man-servant let me into a plain hall, and took my card upstairs. He returned and ushered me into a parlor, where, from appearances, the family had just been dining. In a moment the Baron came in, and warmly grasped my hand. Informing him who I was, he excused himself, but soon returned, and said I should go upstairs by the family. He there introduced me to a pleasant-looking lady, and to his son, standing nearby, a young man of about eighteen. We sat down and I found myself in most agreeable company. The Baron was in fact the very same who had met Dr. Van Doren in 1855. He said he had endeavored afterward to learn of the Doctor's whereabouts but could not. He told me that his father had been chief minister to the King of Holland, and by that means the Baron, himself, came to hold his present office of Lord Chamberlain; that his wife was the daughter of a count, who represented the Dutch government at the Court of St. James, London, some years ago, and that she often went to visit in London. Both the Baron and his wife spoke English, but she better than he. I told them, in reply to inquiries, that the 'van Doorns' of America were an honorable Christian clan, and greatly amused them by reading the published document of how Mrs. Christian Van Doren was, at the time of her death, the progenitor of 356 descendants. Both pressed me to dine with them, but I declined. The Baron stated his son might come to America another year, and I assured him he would be looked after."

In 1878, on a Sunday, I endeavored again to call upon the Baron, and, while his estimable lady was in, he was somewhere in the country, as his custom was on that day, holding evangelistic services, for he was a lay preacher as well as the King's Chamberlain. He was extremely active in religious work, a man universally popular and of great piety. The day following he called upon me at the hotel, but, as I was out, left his card which read: "Le Baron van Doorn de Westkapelle,* Chambellan de S. M. le Roi."

It was not until 1894 that I had another opportunity to call, but the house was then closed. A note of regret that I could not see him was mailed to the house, and in a few days the reply came that the Baron had died on Sept. 21, 1893. In 1908 the Baroness was still residing as a widow at the same residence.

SIR ELISA CORNELIS UNICO VAN DOORN.

As late as Mar. 22, 1880, the king raised a van Doorn, of near Doorn, to the knighthood, so that his title became Sir Elisa Cornelis Unico van Doorn. He was born at Oisterwijk, in the province of North Brabant; arose from the position of Commissioner to that of Minister of Finances; became Member of the Council of State, Royal Commissary in the Province of Utrecht, Commander of the Order of the Netherland Lion, and Grand Officer of the Order of the Iron Crown. He died soon after he became knight, on Aug. 2, 1882, at Maarn, in the Province of Utrecht. Maarn is located only a few miles north of Doorn, and that vicinity was probably the home of his ancestors.

ANOTHER LINE OF BARONS.

There was also a line of Barons van der Doorn, starting with Antony Conrad William, who became Lord van der Doorn. He was born at Zutphen, Apr. 18, 1760, and died at Zwolle, Oct. 30, 1820. Zutphen is in the Province of Guelderland, about thirty miles east of Utrecht, and Zwolle is about twenty miles north of Zutphen. He started life as a page to Prince William V., and became Captain of Cavalry, State Deputy, etc.; and he built, it is said, the "Castle of

*Mr. Willem van Doorn, of Montclair, N. J., says, in a letter to the author: "All my family belong to the Provinces of North Holland and Zeeland. The ancestors of the Zeeland family got the title of 'Heer v. West Kapelle,' which means that the inhabitants of the town of West Kapelle had to consider him as their protector and chief. This of course, is an old-fashioned title without any actual power to interfere with the laws and regulations of the Governor of the Province."

Doorn" in Friesland; perhaps for a summer residence. The title of Baron has been in the family ever since.

It would require a volume and much research in Holland to give sketches of all the titled van Doorns for some centuries past, many of whom had large estates in the Netherlands, and it could only serve a curious purpose to our readers. Happily, in America there are no titles; character alone constitutes nobility.

SOME ALLIED NAMES.

The name "Doorn" appears in Holland under a variety of prefixes and suffixes. Appeldoorn is a thriving town in Guelderland of thirteen thousand people, and is the seat of one of the summer residences of Queen Wilhelmina. There is also a small village called Doornenburg in Guelderland; and another in the same province on the Zuyder Zee called Doornspijk. Then there are towns called Doornhaag, Doornheide, Doornhoek, Doornik, Dorenrot, Dorenwerd, Dornbosch, etc. In Amsterdam there are families by the name of Dooren, Doorenbos, Doorenbosch, Doornbos, Doornberg, Doorne, Doornekamp, Doornen, Doorneveld, Doornewaard, Doornick, Doorninck, Doornum, but none of these use the "van."

All over Europe are Doorn, Dorn, Dorne, etc., families, and it is apparent that the general family (if ever originally one) was an extremely old family, much older than the Eleventh century.

In Germany, Alexander, Bernard, Ernest and Hanns Dorn are well-known authors or editors.

In the Dutch language Doorn means "thorn," or, more strictly, a thorn-bush. For this reason some of the coats-of-arms are embellished with a thorn-tree. "From the thorn" is a literal translation of the name van Doorn; or, as some one has rendered it, "dweller among thorns."

THE VAN DOORN COATS-OF-ARMS.

Long before the Sixteenth century coats-of-arms were in use in the various noble families of van Doorns. These coats-of-arms were various in design, some of them carrying a checkered cross in black and gold, with a golden hunter's horn upon a red ground.

The frontispiece to this volume contains a representation of the coat-of-arms of the Utrecht branch of the family, of the vicinity of Doorn, and was selected for that position from others in part because of its simplicity and beauty, and in part because, conjecturally, Pieter van Doorn of Gravezande was related to this branch, rather than to the Zeeland branch.

The coat-of-arms of the line of De Balbian van Doorn, who was also of the Utrecht branch, differs from the frontispiece in having in the second and third quarters a lion rampant, and in the first and fourth quarters a fish curled in a semi-circle. This same design as to the second and third quarters appears in the arms of the Zeeland family of van Doorns, indicating, I think, that that Zeeland family and the Utrecht, or Peelland, stock had a common origin.

Most of the numerous coats-of-arms in use at the present day in the van Doorn families in Holland will be found in the "Armorial Registers" of that country, where the interested reader may find them.

Families of similar names in Belgium, France and Holland also had their coats-of-arms to be found in the books on heraldry relating to those countries. For example:

- Van Durne family, of Brabant, Belgium.
- Van Durne family, of Flanders, Belgium.
- Van Durne family, of Bruges, Belgium.
- Van Durne family, of Overyssel, Holland.
- Dorne family, of Lorraine, Belgium.
- Dorne family, of Nivernais, France.
- Dorne family, of Dauphiné, France.
- Dorn family, of Nuremberg, Germany.
- Dorn family, of Kempton, Germany.
- Dorn family, of Mecklenburg, Germany.
- Dorne family, of Mecklenburg, Germany.

LINE OF DE BALBIAN VAN DOORN.

The line of de Balbian van Doorn, a member of the nobility of Holland, is traced in some of the armorial books back to Jan (John) van Doorn of Forden, near Cothen (close to Doorn), who was living about the year 1400. A fuller similar record of this line was furnished to the writer in 1874 by the registry office at The Hague. This is the line to which I suppose Pieter van Doorn of Gravezande belonged; and in the hope that at some future day the connection of Pieter with this line may be established, I present it quite fully, the years covered being from about 1400 to about 1650:

I. Jan van Doorn, stated to be living near Cothen, in the province of Utrecht, only about three miles from Doorn. He m. Alyd, dau.

of Jan van Bloemersween (or Bloemerweerde). Their male children were (1) Jan (see next paragraph). (2) Nicholaas, who m. Ermgard, dau. of Jan Roeter, and was living in 1480. (3) Aert, who m. Machteld, dau. of Jan Granwert. He had a son Willem, who m. Catharina, dau. of Jan van Derthuysen. It is stated that Nicholas and his son Willem were also named van Brockhuysen.

II. Jan van Doorn, who m. Alyd van Domselaer. His son was:

III. Jan van Doorn, who m. Willemina van Soudenbalck (or Zondenbalg). He is mentioned in 1493. His son was:

IV. Nicholas van Doorn, who m. Machteld, dau. of Jan Troeye and Maria Granwert. He is mentioned in 1500. Their male children were: (1) Jan (see next paragraph). (2) Willem, who m. Alyd Vuysting. (3) Jan Willem, who m. Elsebé, dau. of Gerrit van Hensden. He carried his coat-of-arms broken with that of his wife's family van Hensden, and had children: (a) Jan, who m. Elizabeth van Hensden and (b) Hendrick, who m. Maria Rutgers, and became sheriff of Asperen, a town about twelve miles southwest of Doorn. Hendrick's son Gijsbert became sheriff of both Asperen and Arkel, and m. Jacoba van Seil. His son Willem Elsebé Gijsbertsz had a son Gijsbrecht, who was high sheriff and dykereeve of the City and Barony of Asperen and Arkel, and who m. Helen Seegers. His son Arnoldus was b. at Asperen in 1681, was sheriff of Asperen and Arkel, and d. in 1761. (This Jan Willem line can be carried down to the present day).

V. Jan van Doorn, who m. Willemyn Hendricks van Denverden (Vandeventer). His male children were: (1) Jan Nicholas (see next paragraph). (2) Evert, who m. Machteld, dau. of Gerrit Sloyers. (3) Jacob, who m. Anna, dau. of Jan Foeyt.

VI. Jan Nicholaas van Doorn, who m. Agnes del Cosne, dau. of Jan Baptist and Lisette van Spangen, and by this marriage received a part of the estates of Spangen. His male children were: (1) Jan (see next paragraph). (2) Evert, who m. Heijltje Kennewez. (3) Jacob, who was Counselor of His Excellency the Count of Brederod. The picturesque red ruins of the Chateau of Brederod are still to be seen in the vicinity of Haarlem. He m. Maria, dau. of Jan van Ommen and Margaretha Vuystinz. Jacob's children were: (a) Evert, who m. Annie van Ommen and was counselor of Utrecht. (b) Maria, who, m. Willem van Reyneveldt. (c) Jan, who m. a dau. of Both Volkerts. (4) Baltius, who m. Agnes van Loeureslott.

VII. Jan van Doorn who is mentioned in 1603. He mar. Christiana Lanikoer, dau. of Matthijs van Betak. His children were: (1) Metje, who m. Jan de Leez. (2) Jacob, who continues the line:

VIII. Jacob van Doorn, who m. Anna van Forden. His children were: (1) Jan, who m. Machteld, dau, of Jacob van Hasfelt of Swanenburg, and Maria van BroekhuySEN. (2) Adriaan, who m. Johanna, dau. of Jan van Loenresloot.

I do not continue this line beyond the above point, because, if any American ancestors of the 1650 period are ever connected with it, it will be found that the connection is to be made somewhere near the point as to time where the last two names of Jan and Jacob are given, or much farther back. The names, Jacob and Jan (John), appear to be favorite Christian names for the line.

The name "Pieter" does not occur in the line above given, but as the main line only to de Balbian is carried out in the foregoing, it does not follow that our American "Pieter" does not belong to this line. Conjecturally he belongs to this branch.

CHAPTER III.

FIRST VAN DOORN FAMILIES IN AMERICA.

AMERICAN SPELLING OF THE NAME.

The early settlers in America, whether using the "van" or not, were invariably placed upon the records as "Doorn." They were certainly conversant with the original name in the mother country, and so were the ministers from the Netherlands, who baptized their children. If these early settlers had not come into contact with the English, it is probable that the name "van Doorn" would have been continued to all descendants until this day. Unfortunately, however, the tendency in America was to spell Dutch names in English after the manner of their pronunciation. In this way very few early Hollanders managed to follow the original spelling, or, if they did, their children or grandchildren altered it. Thus it came about that Zutphen soon became Sutphen; Strycker became Stryker and Striker; Van Vliet became sometimes, Van Fleet; Polhemius became Polhemus; Langestreet became Longstreet, etc. The instances might be continued indefinitely.

The first van Doorns, all of whom located for a time in the State of New York and mainly on Long Island, were sometimes entered correctly on the records, but in many instances the "van" was omitted.

The pronunciation of the name, however, both in Holland and in America was Dorn, not Doorn. Probably for this reason (there certainly could be no other, unless it was that these good Dutchmen were not sufficiently educated to adhere to any particular form of spelling), the name van Doorn soon became changed to Van Dorn, or Van Dorne, and Van Doren, the "van" usually beginning with a capital, and the two words often becoming one word. That none of these later spellings are correct goes without saying. The correct spelling, if the Dutch form is to be followed, but the capitals used, is VAN DOORN. The next best spelling is VAN DORN, since only one letter is dropped and the spelling conforms to the pronunciation. The spelling VAN DOREN is plainly an idiosyncracy.

As will be seen when we come to take up the facts concerning Jacob van Doorn, of near Marlborough, N. J., who is the first certain head of the chief American line given in this work, Jacob wrote his name to his will, if not in earlier documents, "Vandorn."* Five of his children's signatures, taken from original records, some of them in the writer's possession, plainly show that the children, like the father, dropped the second o in "Doorn," and, with the exception of Aure, none of them used a capital D.

Christiaan, Jacob and Abraham were the only sons of the first Jacob who have descendants living at the present time. Because of the very large number of descendants of Christiaan and Abraham (both of whom settled in Somerset County, N. J.), and the smaller number of descendants of Jacob, who remained in Monmouth County, the great majority in this volume are those who followed the spelling "Van Doren."

THE EARLIER VAN DOORN IMMIGRANTS.

The following are the only mentions of the name, or of anything similar, which I have come across in my searches among the early documents of New York and New Jersey, prior to the year 1756:

* For copy of Jacob's own signature as appended to his will, see page 55.

1642. Cornelius Lamberssen van Doorn, of Utrecht, Holland, "a farm servant." In the "History of New Netherlands," by O'Callaghan there is a quotation from what is called the Rensselaerswyck MSS., which shows that "Dominie Johannes Megapolen-sis" was proceeding from Holland to America on June 3, 1642, by the ship "de Houthyyn," and was conveying over certain people and property "in God's name," among whom was the above named Cornelius. He proceeded to Albany; after which there is no other direct trace of him. Evidently his father was Lambert van Doorn, a name which nowhere recurs in this country. I suspect, but without good proofs, that he was the father of Diedlof (infra).

1654. Anneken Meijnderts van Doorn, who married, on Nov. 28, Dirck Smit van Lockeran, ensign. She is stated to be from Embderland (probably Emden, once in East Friesland). Of her there is no further trace. Her father was Meijndert van Doorn, as shown by her name, and she probably came direct from Holland.

1659. Pieter van Doorn. He was, I believe, the head of the chief Monmouth Co. line and is first mentioned under his proper name on Apr. 12, 1659, when his wife, Jannetje Rancken, had a daughter, Jannetje, baptized. Particulars of him are given in the next Chapter.

1663. Aart Martensen Doorn, evidently from his name a son of Martin Doorn, appears this year on the New Amsterdam records, when he was fined 12 1/2 guilders for having a quarrel that came to blows. (Records of New Amsterdam, Vol. IV, p. 328). But this same Aart Martensen appears earlier on a Kingston, Ulster Co., N. Y. record, when, on Dec. 18, 1661, he married Geertruy Andriesse, widow of Jacob Janse Stoll. In this record it is stated that he is a tailor, unmarried, of Well, which is in the southern part of the Island of Bommelerwaard, province of Guelderland; and that his wife is of Doesburgh, in Guelderland; and both are stated to reside in the village of Wiltwyck, the then name for Kingston. Evidently Aart Martensen removed to New Amsterdam in 1661, and it appears that he was there a frequent defendant in litigations. (See Records of New Amsterdam, Vol. IV., pp. 145, 328). In 1682 he was back in Kingston, marrying again; and he married there for the third time in 1684. On Sept. 1, 1689, he took the oath of allegiance in Ulster county. I have not found that he had any children. One of the records, however, gives his name as "Van Dooren." More is related of Aart in one of the Appendices to this volume.

1680. "Didlof" Doorn, of New York, betrothed to Elsje Jenriaens on Dec. 26, 1680, and married to her in New York City, Jan. 12, 1681. His children are known, and one of them, Cornelius, named below, left descendants, many of whose names make up Part III of this book. I conjecture this Diedlof to have been a son of Cornelius Lamberssen van Doorn, of Utrecht (named above), but there are no proofs. He died about 1688.

1681. Wartje Jane Dornen married Jan Remsz at Flatbush, in December. No further trace, and the name is uncertain, but she was Dutch.

1686. Mayke van Doorn, of Yellow Hoek, New Utrecht (now Bay Ridge), married Pieter Vandeventer on March 22. She was also called "Mayke Christiaan." I believe she was a sister to Jacob (infra) and a daughter of Pieter. As such her descendants are partially given in Part III, under Maria (1606).

1692. Margariet Doorens. She is mentioned on February 5, when Jan Andrieszen, "widower of Margariet Doorens," was proclaimed for marriage to Marie Rudtgers, widow of Joris Janszen. Her name is uncertain, but she was Dutch, and perhaps a sister of Diedlof Doorn (supra).

1695. Jacob van Doorn, who then appears on the records of the Reformed Dutch church in New York, on Oct. 19, as admitted to the membership of that church. Subsequently he had children baptised in the Reformed Dutch church in Brooklyn. He is the progenitor of all those named in this work, in Part II.

1702. Catherina Dooren, "maiden from New York," was registered for marriage, on Nov. 13, to Solomon Goewijj, "bachelor from New Albany, residing on the Dentil Road," and "married in December." No further trace.

1709. Cornelius van Doorn (written by himself "Dooren," but by his pastor and the scriveners of the time "van Doorn"), is found this year on Feb. 5, in Monmouth Co., N. J., at the baptism of a daughter Allicia (Alice), and previously as the purchaser of a tract of land there, on January 25. He was undoubtedly the son of Diedlof (supra).

CHAPTER IV.

PIETER VAN DOORN, OF LONG ISLAND.

As the remainder of this Part (Part I) is to be devoted to what is called the "Line of Jacob van Doorn of Monmouth County, New Jersey," what little is known here concerning his father, Pieter, who was, doubtless, the immigrant from Holland, will now be stated. The reason this Line is not called the "Line of Pieter" is because this Pieter has scarcely been heard of by his descendants and is only once mentioned by name in any records. He must have died when his son Jacob was an infant, and it is doubtful if the latter knew more about his father than the name. Another reason is, that there will always remain some uncertainty as to Pieter's being the father of Jacob, so long as there are no actual proofs by written records of baptisms. It is reasonably certain, however, that Pieter was Jacob's father.

The first publication made in this country concerning Pieter van Doorn and his descendants was in "Our Home" for 1873, a monthly publication printed at Somerville, N. J., edited by the author of this volume. In a first article published upon the subject of the "Van Dorens," Judge Ralph Voorhees, of Middlebush, said (p. 337): "Jacobus* Van Doren, or Van Doorn, arrived in this country nearly two hundred years ago, and was the progenitor of the families of that name in America." In a later issue of the same magazine (p. 571), Rev. Garret C. Schenck, of Marlborough, N. J., took up the subject and gave a most satisfactory account of Jacob van Doorn's emigration to Monmouth County from Long Island, of his land possessions near Hillsdale, of his probable parentage, and of his children. It was this article which led the author, a descendant of Jacob, to take up more thoroughly the subject of his ancestry and descendants in America.

In his article, Rev. Mr. Schenck said: "There was a Pieter van Doorn, who, with his wife, Jannetje Rancken, had a child Jannetje baptized, as appeared from the Collegiate Church records, Apr. 12, 1659. From the prevalence of the name of Pieter in the family, I regard this Pieter as the father in this country. I suppose he resided on Long Island, from whence, as was common before a minister was settled on the Island, parents took their children over to New Amsterdam to have them baptized. I also suppose that Pieter van Doorn died when his children were young, as there is no mention of his name among those who took the oath of allegiance in 1687, or in the preserved tax lists of those times. I also think it altogether possible that Jacob van Doorn, who removed from the western end of Long Island and settled in Monmouth County about the year 1698, was a son of this Pieter."

*The Judge was evidently not aware that "Jacobus" was the usual Dutch for James. As a matter of fact, the name "Jacobus Van Doorn" does not occur on any of the records in this country. Nor did Jacob (who was meant) come from Holland, so far as any documents show.

The first appearance of Pieter in the records of this country has heretofore been overlooked, because by some error of the clergyman who made the record of Pieter's marriage and then that of his widow, Pieter's name is given erroneously. One of the marriages of record in the Dutch Reformed church in New York City is the following:

1657, Dec. 1. "Pieter Narne van s'Gravensande, wedr. van Catharyn Stelting en Janneken Rancke, wede. van Thomas Colyn." The English of which is: "Pieter Narne, of Gravezande, widower of Catharyn Stelting, and Janneke Rancken, widow of Thomas Colyn."

The next entry concerning him is:

"1659, den 1 Mart. James Chamel, van Aberdün, soldaat, en Anneken Ranckes, Wede. van Pieter Narne." The English of which is: "James Chamel, of Aberdeen, soldier, and Anneke (Jannetje) Rancken, widow of Pieter Narne."

No one could suspect from this that the person spoken of was Pieter van Doorn. But in April, 1659, when a child of Pieter was baptized, the record became straightened out, and is as follows:

"1659, Apr. 12. Pieter Van Doren, Jannetje Rancken: Jannetje. Witnesses: Jonas Ransouw, Jan Cockre, Jannetje Dossen."

This is the only mention of Pieter on any American record that has been preserved.

I cannot account for the previous errors, unless that, in giving in his name at the time of his marriage, "Doorn" was misunderstood for "Narne;" or it may be that the latter was a patronymic that had been used by Pieter and concerns his Holland ancestry.

It is the first record given above, that of 1657, which shows that Pieter had come from Gravezande, Holland. Gravezande is a town of considerable size, eight miles southwest of The Hague, and thus he is definitely located as to his place of residence in that country. We learn, again, that Pieter had as his first wife Catharyn Stelting, who died prior to Dec. 1, 1657, when he married "Janneken Rancke, widow of Thomas Colyn."

The fact that Pieter's name was spelled upon the records at the time of the baptism of his daughter Jannetje, "Van Doren" merely goes to show that the spelling of the name of van Doorn was already subject to the whimsicalities of the times.

From the two records of 1659 we also learn that Pieter's child, Jannetje, was a posthumous child, or at least was baptised after Pieter's death; and it fixes Pieter's death as between, say the middle of 1658, and Mar. 1, 1659. In fact, when Pieter's child Jannetje was baptized, his wife was already, as a widow, married to James Chamel, a Scotchman; and we hear no more of her. She certainly was in haste to secure a third husband!

A search of the records of Gravezande, Holland, made in 1907, yielded no results as to Pieter; although, in 1729, the archives of the city show that there was then living there an Ariaentje, "daughter of Pieter van Doorne, only heiress, ab intestato of her late sister, Grietje Pieters, daughter of van Doorne, widow of Cornelis Janse Alenburgh." It might be this Grietje, deceased, and Ariaentje, the "only heiress," of Grietje, who were the children of a "Pieter van Doorne," were early children by Catharine Steling of the very same Pieter who came to America, but there are no clews to the real facts. In any event the record given shows that a van Doorn family, one of whom was a Pieter van Doorn, was located at Gravezande several decades after a Pieter of Gravezande came to Long Island.

A VISIT TO GRAVEZANDE.

The writer visited Gravezande in August, 1908, and found it to be a typical inland Holland town, consisting mainly of one long street, brick-paved the whole width and length, well shaded with trees, and with that air of quiet and ease characteristic of all small Dutch towns. The houses, built of brick, usually consists of one story and an attic, some of the window shutters on them being painted yellow and some vermilion. Midway down the main street there is a market square, around which are a few shops and a small hotel, and in the centre an open music pavilion. The only extremely venerable looking house in the place is located near the chief church, and might easily be three hundred years old. The chief church is invariably the most ancient one in all Holland towns, and, as in this case, is called the "Groote Kirk," meaning "The Great Church;" and is the regular Evangelical Lutheran church.

Unfortunately, in Gravezande the "Groote Kirk" is not the same ancient building that existed in Pieter van Doorn's day, as that was destroyed by fire in 1717, and with it went all the records anterior to that date. The destruction of those records seems to have cut off all obtainable clews as to the parentage of Pieter. The present church, doubtless following the old style, is square, and, in its present condition, dates from 1815.

Gravezande is reached from The Hague, from which it is only eight miles distant, by a steam tram, which goes through a pleasant country containing many canals and various hamlets. I learned of only one "van Doorn" in the vicinity, but, as he was at Maasdijk, a hamlet some miles distant from Gravezande (not upon the Holland maps), I was unable to call upon him.

CONCLUDING WORDS ON PIETER.

A statement once came to me in a circumlocutory manner that Pieter van Doorn was born at Gravezande in 1709; married his first wife there; came to Flushing, L. I., in 1739; and that there was some record to that effect in the archives of the Holland Society of New York. But the Secretary of that Society has not been able to verify this information, however probable it seems to be.

The published records of the Dutch emigrations to Long Island during the Seventeenth century do not disclose the name of Pieter van Doorn, but it is known that they are very imperfect.

Pieter probably lived near Gowanus, because his son Jacob went from Gowanus to Monmouth Co., N. J.; but many of the Dutch church records of that vicinity have been lost, and there is no account of the baptism of any child of Pieter by Catharine Stelting, his first wife.

Jacob van Doorn, of Monmouth, must have been the son of Pieter by Catharine Stelting, and not by Jannetje Rancken, for Pieter died too soon after his marriage to Jannetje to have had two children.

As to the particular reasons why it seems extremely certain that Pieter was the father of Jacob I have simply to observe: (1) That Pieter van Doorn is the only known van Doorn who lived on Long Island, or in the vicinity of New York, who could have been his father. (2) That Jacob named one of his children Pieter, (baptized Petrus, which was but another Dutch form of the same name). (3) That Jacob named one of his early daughters Catherine. (4) Jacob was clearly born prior to 1657, because he was an aged man at his death about 1720, and if born in 1657, he would have been only sixty-three years of age. I judge him to have been born sometime between 1650 and 1655. He could easily have been the son of Pieter van Doorn and Catherine Stelting.

MARIA VAN DOORN OF LONG ISLAND.

What more is to be said concerning Jacob will appear in the next Chapter. Here I shall only consider another supposed child of Pieter's, one Maria van Doorn.

Maria van Doorn came from the neighborhood of Gowanus (from Yellow Hoeck, now New Utrecht), and married, Mar. 22, 1686, Pieter van Deventer. Strangely enough, she is also called on the records by another name, that of "Mayke Christiaan." I judge that she was born about 1653; that Pieter van Deventer was her second husband; and that perhaps a Mr. Christiaan was the name of her first husband.

The fact that Pieter van Deventer's wife's name was Maria van Doorn is first disclosed in the baptism of their children, Abraham and Isaac (twins) on August 16, 1704, at the Reformed Dutch church of New York City. Previously, at the baptism of a prior child, Christian, in 1687 at Flatbush, and also at her marriage in 1686 in the Brooklyn records, it appears as "Maria Christiaan." That she was married at an earlier period than 1686 to a Christiaan is the view I am inclined to adopt: first, because the New York records of that period were kept much more carefully and exactly than the Brooklyn records, as those who have studied these records know, and they invariably gave the wife's maiden name at all baptisms. Second, because Pieter van Deventer and his wife appear as sponsors at the baptism of Christian, second son of Jacob van Doorn, on Sept. 17, 1699, when this son was baptised at Brooklyn. Third, Pieter van Deventer and his wife, Maria, followed Jacob van Doorn to Monmouth County soon after Jacob's settlement there, and in the same immediate neighborhood. Circumstances are often as strong in genealogical matters as direct facts.

It must not be overlooked that there is a wide gap in years between Pieter van Deventer's first child, in 1687, and the next recorded baptism in 1704; the probability is there were other children born between those dates.

CHAPTER V.

JACOB VAN DOORN, OF MONMOUTH CO., N. J.

Jacob van Doorn, of near Hillsdale (a small village located between Marlborough and Holmdel), Monmouth county, New Jersey, was the certain ancestor of all the families and individuals noticed in the next succeeding Part of this work. Most of the Van Dorns and Van Dorens in this country trace their ancestry to him, the exception being a comparatively small number of Van Dorns scattered throughout the West, who belong to the line of Cornelius, of Part III.

As previously stated, Jacob was probably born at Gowanus, Long Island, between 1650 and 1655. He died near the beginning of the year 1720, on his large estate near Hillsdale, when perhaps approaching seventy years of age. He married, about 1690, Marritje (Maria) Bennet, of Gowanus, L. I. It seems reasonable to suppose from his age at that time that he had married an earlier wife, but if so there is no trace of her name or of any descendants by her.

That Jacob was in early life left an orphan appears quite plainly from the fact that he named all his ten children after members of his wife's family except the two, Catherine and Peter, named after his parents. He probably was brought up near Gowanus by strangers. He named no child after his step-mother, Jannetje.

There is no record of Jacob's marriage. There is a tradition among his descendants that his wife brought with her to Jacob's home a dowry of "$100,000" or thereabouts, but it could not have been true. Her father, Arie Bennet, was wealthy, no doubt, but his property, divided among eleven children, would not have gone far. We may judge the story to have originated from the fact that Arie Bennet was thrifty, and that Jacob van Doorn was thrifty also and possessed, within seven years after his marriage, two or three large farms in Monmouth County, giving at least two of his sons a fine start in the world, and that his children intermarried with some of the best and wealthiest families of his neighborhood. Nevertheless, neither Maria nor Jacob were ever actually wealthy, but only in good circumstances.

The first that is actually known of Jacob is his appearance at the Dutch church in "Breuklen" (Brooklyn) Oct. 19, 1695, when he was received as a church member. His name is given on that record as "Jakop van Doorn."

The next record concerning him is that he had a son Christyean (Christian) baptized Sept. 17, 1699, at Brooklyn. Then his name appears as "Jacob van Dooren." Thenceforward we know considerable about him; and perhaps it may be well, for purposes of exactness as to records, to group together in this place the known and conjectural dates concerning him:

DATES CONCERNING JACOB VAN DOORN.

- 1654. Born probably about this time, at or near Gowanus, L. I.
- 1690. Jacob married Maria Bennet, probably at Gowanus, either this year or soon after. Probably, also, she was his second wife.
- 1692. Supposed child, Pieter,* born, who died young; this on the hypothesis that, following the Dutch rule, he must have named after his father a first son Pieter. If so, he died before 1711, when a Petrus was baptized. Or Jacob may have had a son "Pieter" by a first wife. If so, he did not live beyond 1711.
- 1693, March. His son, Aure, born; named after Jacob's wife's father. Date of his birth known from Aure's tombstone. Probably born at Gowanus, and also spelled "Arie," "Aurie," "Aury," and "Aaron."
- 1695, Oct. 19. Jacob received into the membership of the Dutch church in New York. Name entered as "Jakop van Doorn." (Collegiate Church Records).
- 1696, Oct. 9. His first daughter, Engeltje, born; named from her aunt, Engel Bennet, sister to Jacob's wife.
- 1697, Feb. 14. Jacob buys land, amount not stated, of Richard Salter, in Pleasant Valley, Monmouth Co., N. J. Also, on Apr. 2, he and his brother-in-law, Arie Bennet, buy more land, adjoining the first named tract.
- 1699, Aug. 11. His second son, Christian, born, presumably named from Jacob's sister, Maria Christian Van Deventer, or possibly from Jacob's wife's uncle, Christian Bennet; baptized Sept. 17 at Brooklyn. Name entered as "Christyjan," and father as "Jacob Van Dooren." Witnesses, Pieter Van Dyk and Mayke Van De-

* From the date of Aure's birth we know that Jacob married prior to 1693. I have supposed that his first son's name was "Pieter," who died young, as it was the custom to name the first-born male after the father's father. Naturally "Aure" would come next, after the mother's fatner. In such case Jacob's marriage must be dated to about 1690. As Maria's last child was born in 1715, we are probably not astray in our surmise. However, no record of Jacob's marriage exists.

In the Onderdonk MS. of early baptisms and marriages in Kings Co., N. Y., in possession of the Long Island Historical Society, we find this note: "Many of the old church records of Kings County have been lost. The Rev. Peter Low, who was a book binder by trade, gathered all the loose records he could find and had them bound in one volume." It is evident from the comparatively small number of records saved that he only found a few of the numerous ones which had existed on western Long Island, and which the ministers there took no special pains to preserve.

venter (the latter a Maria van Doorn and believed to be Jacob's sister).

1699. Some time this year he is chosen to serve on the grand jury in Monmouth County, a proof that he must have been settled there for some period, though he continued to have his children baptized in Brooklyn, there being no Dutch church in Monmouth Co.

1700, May 16. In a deed from John Reid of Hortencie, Monmouth Co., to John Bowne, the land described is said to join land of "Jacob van Dorne." (East Jersey Deeds, Vol. 6, p. 244).

1700, May 17. In a deed from the same John Bowne to Garret Schenck, part of the foregoing land is conveyed and said to adjoin "Jacob van Dorn." (Ibid, p. 271).

1700, May 17. He purchased 200 acres of land from John Bowne of Monmouth, "merchant." A co-grantee of this land was Arie Bennet, his brother-in-law. The land bounded lands of Garret Schenck, Albert Couwenhoven and "land claimed by John Johnston." The deed was not recorded until May 22, 1776, at Trenton (in Book H. 3, p. 176). It recites that the land was part of that conveyed by William Penn, on January 15 of the same year, to John Bowne. This land was, in the year 1695, in the possession of an Indian by the name of Wickatong, and must have passed from him to William Penn.

1700. The name of "Jacob Vandorn" appears on two remonstrances (both undated, but one in 1700 and one in 1701) to the King of Great Britain (William III.), against the acts of the Proprietors of East Jersey, with the request for the appointment of a competent Governor, etc. (N. J. Archives, First Series, Vol. II., pp. 326; 396).

1700. This same year (date not stated) his earliest signature appears as witness to a deed, which is stated to "show an unusual excellence for a penman of those times." (Rev. Garret C. Schenck in "Our Home," p. 571. This signature I have not seen, nor any other except that to Jacob's last will, when he was very feeble).

1700. With eight others, "Jacob Vandorne" is presented by the Monmouth County grand jury for an assault. The particulars throw such a light on those times that they are fully recited hereafter.

1701. About this year his third son, William, born; no record of his baptism. The son was named, doubtless, after Jacob's wife's grandfather, William Bennet.

1703, Jan. 21. His fourth son, Jacob, born; named after himself. Jacob, Jr., was baptized on April 27, at Brooklyn, and the father named as "Jacob van Doorn."

1705, May 29. His second daughter, Angenycie, baptized at Brooklyn; named after Jacob's wife's mother. The father is named as "Jacob van Dooren," and witnesses are Isaac Bennet and Lena, his wife.

1705, Nov. 6. He was appointed this date an "Ensign," by Lord Cornbury. (Record in Sec. of State's office, Trenton).

1707. His third daughter, Catherine, was born this year; no record of her baptism. Doubtless named from Jacob's mother, Catherine Stelting.

1709, Sept. 9. This was the year and day on which the (present) Marlborough church was founded, though a church building was not then erected. Jacob was one of the two first deacons of it, and he and his wife were among the charter members. Names entered as "Jacob van Doorn and Maryka, his wife." Later he became an elder.

1709, Oct. 20. His fifth son, Abraham, entered as baptized on Brooklyn records. The father is named as "Jacob van Doorn." The same record entered on the church books at (present) Marlborough church. It is probable that, for want of a minister to baptise at Marlborough, Jacob and his wife went to Brooklyn, and subsequently had the record made again in his own home church book. Abraham was named after Jacob's wife's brother, Abraham Bennet.

1711, Sept. 2. His sixth son, Petrus, baptized at (present) Marlborough Church; supposed to be named from Jacob's father, Pieter.

1714, May 9. Jacob and his wife sponsors at the baptism of Katrinke, daughter of "Adrian" (Arie) Bennet, (Jacob's brother-in-law) and Barbara, his wife, at the Marlborough church.

1715, Mar. 13. His seventh son, Isaac, baptized at Marlborough church; named after Jacob's wife's brother, Isaac Bennet.

1719, Apr. 24. Jacob made his will, being very ill. Sometime following this date and March, 1720, he died; probably early in 1720.

1720, March 21. His will proved.

1720, July 17. His widow sponsor to a baptism at Marlborough; entered as "Marike Bennet, widow of J. van Doorn."

1734, Jan. 1. His widow sponsor at the baptism of her grandson Jacob, son of her son Jacob.

JACOB'S MARRIAGE.

Jacob, as has been noted, married, about 1690, Maria (in Dutch called Morritie, Maryke, Marritje, etc.) Bennet.

Maria Bennet was half English, and, therefore, it cannot be said of the descendants of Jacob van Doorn that their blood is wholly Dutch! She was one of eleven children of Arie Bennet, an Englishman, who was born in 1637, and of his wife, Angenietje Jans Van Dyck, a Hollander, who was the daughter of Jan Van Dyck of New Utrecht, Long Island. Her grandfather was William Bennet, who came to this country prior to 1636, at which time he purchased, with Jaques Bentyn, 930 acres of land at Gowanus of the Indians; subsequently buying in Bentyn's share. He married Mary Badye (sometimes called Mary Thomas),* who had had a previous husband, Jacob Verdon, and a successive husband, Paulus Vanderbek. He died previous to 1644.

William Bennet's son, Arie, was born in 1639. Arie was married, Dec. 3, 1662, and was a member of and deacon of the New Utrecht church in 1677, and constable of the town in 1676. He owned a farm in New Utrecht, and also various lots at what is now Bay Ridge, the latter amounting to about 150 acres, which he sold in 1682. His farm he sold in 1681, and then removed to Gowanus, his birthplace, purchasing there the "Schermerhorn farm," for "12,000 guilders in good merchantable wheat." He was accounted a rich man. He was on the census as late as 1698, and probably then died.

Arie Bennet's eleven children were: Jan; Arie (called "Adrian"); Barbara; Tryntje, who married Cornelius van Brunt; Jacob; Cornelis; Isaac; Abraham; Antje, who married Jacob Sutphen of Freehold; Marritje (Maria), who married Jacob van Doorn; Agnietje and Engel.

Adrian, or Arie, the son, was a deacon of the Marlborough church soon after 1709, and an elder in 1720, succeeding Jacob van Doorn, his brother-in-law.

Cornelis had at least two children: Mallenke, baptised Feb. 12, 1712 and Isaac, baptised Apr. 14, 1717.

JACOB'S SETTLEMENT IN MONMOUTH COUNTY.

To return now to Jacob's migration from Long Island to New Jersey. He doubtless was a farmer at or near Gowanus (now Bay Ridge), L. I., and when he married Maria Bennet, rather late in life

* Maria Badye (or Thomas), widow of Poulus Vanderbek, was the dau. of Aeltie Brackhoengie; and her wealth was such that she gave to the Reformed Dutch church of Brooklyn a silver communion service

(possibly as his second wife), he cast about to see where he might locate for himself. His brother-in-law, Arie Bennet, must have decided to go with him, for both became settlers of Monmouth County at about the same time. The father of Jacob's wife, Arie Bennet, Sr., was still living, for he appears on the census rolls of Gowanus in 1698, and was then sixty-one years of age. He must have given Maria a dowry but she could not at that period have been "wealthy." Doubtless Arie, Sr., died between 1698 and 1700, as his name no longer appears on Long Island documents, and then Maria may have fallen heir to considerable money, with which Jacob in conjunction with Arie, Jr., purchased the John Bowne tract of 200 acres, in addition to his 1697 purchases.

Plenty of Long Island Dutchmen were then going out beyond the bounds of that little territory, which was too narrow for them, to New York state—to Ulster and contiguous counties—and into New Jersey. The Scotch and English had settled various parts of Monmouth county, beginning as early as 1665, when the Dutch surrendered their provinces in America to the British Crown, and about 1695 the Dutch began to follow. It was convenient to go there—by water just across from Long Island; the land was fertile and the East Jersey Governor (Hamilton) sought hard for new settlers.*

Contemporaneously with Jacob van Doorn's settlement in what was then called "Middletown and Plantations," embracing a tract of about 30,000 acres, there came in families named Schenck (probably Garret Schenck was the first Dutch purchaser of land there in 1695), Polhemus, Couwenhoven, Hendrickson, Van Kirk, Wyckoff and Van Cleef; names invariably spelled on the records differently from the foregoing. The names Smock, Van Mater, Sutphen, Brower and Van Der Veer were also known there at nearly the same period.

"Middletown and Plantations" then contained, or did in 1685, a hundred families, and Shrewsbury about as many. It was the "garden of Monmouth county," and as productive as the Valley of the Raritan; for some things more so, because of a sandy, and, therefore, a warmer soil.

The first land purchased by Jacob van Doorn was a tract described as bounded by "Hop Brook, Penn's land and a deep gulley,"

* In regard to the subject why Jacob van Doorn and other Dutch settlers of Gowanus and other New England towns, left these localities, when there was unoccupied land close by, and went to Monmouth and adjoining counties, Hon. George C. Beekman, in his "Early Dutch Settlers in Monmouth County," states the chief reason very succinctly. They disliked the English control of New Amsterdam and adjacent territory, and chafed under it. His chapter on this subject (see page 35 of his work) is conclusive.

and was conveyed (Feb. 14, 1697) by Richard Salter, who had been a Justice of the Supreme Court, and was a very active and influential business man of that and later days. The consideration was £140 (about $700). On April 2 following, Jacob and his brother-in-law, Arie Bennet, purchased of the same Richard Salter (the deed in fact was from John Reid* to Salter and assigned by Salter to Jacob) a much larger tract, being part of "Hortencie," (near present Hillsdale), owned by John Bowne, and described as "on the east branch of Hop river." Hop river is now a creek in Monmouth County, nearly between the present township of Holmdel and Middletown.

As it was not a universal custom in those days to record deeds, these to Jacob van Doorn were not recorded until 1743, when his children caused them to be put on record. (Monmouth Co. Deeds, Book H., pp. 197, 325).

So that Jacob probably settled on more than 475 acres, and farmed it for three years, when, on May 17, 1700; he and his brother-in-law, Arie Bennet, purchased an additional 200 acres of land from John Bowne, a merchant of Monmouth, and a Judge of the County. From the description of the land it would not seem to have adjoined his previous purchases, but must have been approximate thereto. In time Jacob alone became the owner of all this land, amounting in the whole to about 676 acres; and it was as fine a quality of land as was to be found in the county of Monmouth, most of it, of course, being wooded.

This large farm, all of which he could not certainly till, and to pay for which he seems to have had considerable cash (there are no evidences that he ever gave a mortgage), lies in a portion of what is now known as Pleasant Valley, the name being derived from its intrinsic pleasantness. In this valley, and extending on the hills on either side, were his newly acquired lands. I have been on them and can testify to the wisdom of his choice in their selection. A few years ago these

* John Reid was a Scotch Quaker of great influence, and we find him closely associated with William Penn. He had been a bookseller in Edinburgh, and was selected by the Scotch proprietors of East Jersey as "overseer" in charge of a party of emigrants sent to America in 1683. He was born in Mildrew Castle, Feb. 13, 1655. Having made a map of lands on the Raritan, Rahway and South Rivers, he received for his services a grant of a tract of land in Monmouth County, which he called "Hortencie," and to which he removed from Perth Amboy in 1686. He was several times a member of the General Assembly, and was Surveyor General in the year when the Proprietors surrendered the government of East Jersey to Queen Anne. He was in 1700 foreman of the grand jury that indicted so many of his neighbors, including Jacob van Doorn. He died March 16, 1723, aged sixty-seven, and was buried in Topanemus, near Freehold. Either he, or his son John, owned the land in 1715 on which the Monmouth Court House, now Freehold, was placed.

Richard Salter was a member of the General Assembly in 1704, and was mixed up with the so-called "revolution" in Monmouth Co., when the authority of Governor Hamilton was disputed. He was the American agent of William Dockwra, who owned 3815 acres on the tributaries of the Millstone River.

lands were in three farms, owned by Thomas Ely, Jonathan Holmes and Dr. Cook, although one small portion of woodland of $22\frac{1}{2}$ acres was in the ownership of Hon. Daniel P. Van Dorn, then of Freehold, and so continued until his death in 1898, when it was willed to his wife. Mr. Van Dorn's great-grandfather was Peter (grandson to the first Jacob; son of Jacob's son, Jacob), and he acquired this, with other lands by inheritance; and it descended from son to son, so that, from 1697 or 1700 to 1908, a period of about 210 years, this woodland has been in the ownership of one family.

The original location of Jacob's first residence was on a point of hill about one mile west from the present village of Holmdel, which is the nearest settlement now to Jacob's large estate. It was quite near to what is known as Ely's Mills. Only tradition preserves the site. Said the late Rev. Garret C. Schenck, who was perfectly familiar with the locality and with the deeds and settlements thereabouts: "His first dwelling, like that of other settlers in the wilderness country, was no doubt built of logs,* and this in a few years was succeeded by a plain but more comely abode; and again, when Jacob Couwenhoven possessed this part of the property, he erected the spacious mansion, subsequently remodelled and occupied by Mr. Thomas Ely. On the stream coming down from the hills, encircling Pleasant Valley, and but a short distance east of this dwelling, Jacob van Doorn erected a grist mill, at what particular date I have been unable to ascertain, but no doubt not long after his settlement here, and among the first in the country, as the wants of the surrounding community called for such a convenience. It (the mill) remained on that location until 1829, when the late Sheriff Ely erected a windmill on the site about 200 yards lower down in the stream, and the mill was taken down. The old pond has now become entirely filled up by the sand washed down from above."

It follows from this description that no part of the first or second abode of Jacob still remains, but near (not quite on) the site of his house, is the house erected about 1780, by Jacob Couwenhoven, where John S. and William H. Ely now live. From another source it is learned that the grist mill was erected about 1710, and the site of it can still be located by an attentive observer.

There could not have been at this time a public road in front of Jacob's house going to the Dutch church at Marlborough, since in the will of Roelif Schenck of April 10, 1765, in referring to a part of his

* Of timber and clay, the usual house of the time was 30 x 16 feet, with a double chimney. The log cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born was, probably, similar to Jacob's first house.

land, he says: "Beginning where the path that crosses from Vandoren's and goes to the Dutch church crosses the line."

At the time of Jacob's land purchases the only jail in the County of Monmouth was at Middletown (which was an old settlement, being on Vanderdonck's Map of New Jersey, published in Holland in 1656), where it remained until 1715, when it was removed to Freehold and made a part of the court house building, erected in 1715. Previously the county Court had been held at the Highlands, and in the meeting-houses at Middletown and Shrewsbury. In fact, Middletown was, substantially, the local seat of government. There was no such settled government as in New York, or in parts of West Jersey; for East Jersey affairs were in much confusion, as will soon appear.

There were Indians, but they were not over numerous in that part of the state, and were docile and helpful. Wheat, rye, oats, barley and Indian corn were the crops raised, and the yield was large. Timber abounded and needed to be cleared. Wolves and wild deer were frequently seen, and wild turkeys, partridges and plenty of fish were to be had for the exertion of securing them.

About the same year of Jacob's arrival, there was an effort made, and a successful one, to secure preaching occasionally in the Dutch language, probably in the houses of the neighborhood. Dutch "Dominies" from Long Island were sent for and preached in rotation: Lupardus, Antonides and Freeman, pastors of Collegiate churches of King's county, Long Island. Freeman was celebrated for his knowledge of the Indian language. This arrangement continued for ten years, when a church was founded, as we shall presently see.

CURIOS HAPPENINGS IN MONMOUTH.

That so early as the year 1700, when Jacob was comparatively a new settler, he should be presented by the grand jury for an "assault," would present a vexing question of his good morals, were it not that all the facts are known to those familiar with this period of the history of East Jersey, and these facts do not bear as bad a phase as they seem.

The facts are these: The government of East Jersey was in the hands of Proprietors, who had chosen Col. Andrew Hamilton to be Governor. Hamilton had been popular in earlier days, but now, after a reappointment, was exceedingly distasteful to the people, especially as he ignored titles to lands from the Indians, or other early occupiers of the soil. The people, therefore, desired the King of England to take full control, and not appointees of the Council of Proprietors.

Political agitation was great; the excitement grew with each new attempt of the Proprietors' agents to dispossess landholders of lands they had acquired by purchase of other landowners. The population about Freehold, and extending to the Amboys (and Jacob van Doorn among them) remonstrated, twice, to the King.* As nothing immediately came of it, and as a sheriff was appointed over Monmouth county, who was supposed to be determined to evict many of the landowners, illegally as the latter believed, recourse was had to violence. A letter from one of the Council of Proprietors, dated at Middletown, July 23, 1700 (the nearest populated place, then, to where Jacob van Doorn was settled) gave the facts thus (for easy reading, it is here spelled and capitalized in modern fashion):

"They" (the Proprietors) "turned out an Englishman who was sheriff, and put in a Scotchman, who they thought could obey them without reserve, and it is said Morris" [Lewis Morris] "hath given out that he will carry his point in making the people submit to Col. Hamilton's government, or he will embrue the Province in blood. In order to which they seized upon several persons, intending to force them to give security for their good behavior, which one of them refused and so continued in the sheriff's custody. This the people took grievously to heart, it being harvest time; and they had given out warrants to seize Richard Salter and others; and the sheriff had like to have taken him: which some of his neighbors understanding, went and met the sheriff, banged him, broke his head and sent him packing." ("N. J. Archives," First Series, Vol. II, p. 328).

Another account of the transaction, dated July 30, says: "Just as harvest began Morris and others gave warrants to an indigent sheriff to apprehend several men in Monmouth county, who in their own just defense beat the pretended sheriff to the shedding of blood on both sides. Col. Hamilton, who resides chiefly at Burlington, was sent to immediately, who came and raised between forty and fifty men, and armed them, and marched from Shrewsbury to Middletown to meet the country who opposed him with one hundred and seventy men, but without arms. He, when he came up to them, asked for two men, but they not being there he withdrew his men without further harm, but swore bitterly he would have them if above ground. . . . The country are rising by whole towns against them." (Ibid, p. 330).

So it was to stop arbitrary arrests in a harvest season that, not Jacob van Doorn alone, but, apparently, all his neighbors, resisted, and while they did not "break" the sheriff's head literally, there were evidently unarmed blows and some bloodshed.

Of course Hamilton and Morris would endeavor to secure the indictment of the offenders, and seven of them were presented by a grand jury, at a court over which Morris himself, by reason of his office, sat as judge! Morris called and charged the jury (none of them Hollanders), and on the same day of the charge, given at Shrewsbury, August 27, 1700, the jury, with John Reid as their foreman, returned the following indictment:

"August ye 27th 1700 Wee jurors present Richard Salter John Bray James Stout David Stout Benjamine Stout Cornelius Compton William Boune Thomas Taylor Thomas Hankinson Jacob Vandorne Arian Bennet Thomas Sharp Benjamine Cook Robert Innes Thomas Estal and Samuel a servant to said Salter ffor Riotously assembling on the 17th day of July and assaulting Jacob Stewart high Sheriff & Henry Leonard on the path neer to the house of Alex. Adam Beat and greivously wound the said persons tak ther swords from them brak them caryd them away and keep them to the value of ffive pounds money of this province. In breach of the peace and terrour of the Kings leidge people signe in behalfe of the rest by John Reid forman." (Ibid, p. 332).

So far as may be gathered from the records, nothing came of it. It ended there. The indictment was never tried.*

In 1702 Queen Anne took over the government, the scandals of the officers acting for the Board of Proprietors being too great to have such a situation continued. The landholders of Monmouth county were thus secured in their titles to their farms.

That Jacob became something of a military man soon after these events is clear from the fact that he was advanced to an Ensign in "that company of militia in the eastern part of Freehold wherein Captain Salter is Captain," on Nov. 6, 1705, on which date Lord Cornbury appointed him to that office. The record of the appointment is in the state archives at Trenton, and is dated at Perth Amboy. The document says that "Edward, Viscount Cornbury, Capt Generall and Governor in Chief of the Province of New Jersey, New York and Territories depending thereon in America and the Admirall of the same, Reposing special Trust and Confidence," etc., appoints "Jacob Vandorne, ensign," etc.

* A fuller account of the conflict between the people of Middletown and Lewis Morris of "Tinturn Manor," now Tinton Falls, in Monmouth Co., appears in Mr. Beckman's "Early Dutch Settlers" pages 39 to 63. He shows that, without doubt, Jacob Van Doorn and his brother-in-law, Arie Bennet, with others who were indicted, simply stood up for their rights as freemen against "the tyrannical and illegal acts of a surprising governor and his pretended officers of the law." "It speaks well," says he, "for their resolution, courage and intelligence." As to their breaking up the court in Middletown, his conclusion is that "Jacob van Doorn and the others deserve the praise and gratitude of posterity. . . . It destroyed the government of wrangling and contending factions and relieved the people from much injustice and wrong." Mr. Beckman calls it "the First Declaration of Independence."

ERECTING THE FIRST MONMOUTH DUTCH CHURCH.

In 1709 Jacob and his neighbors began to agitate for a Dutch church in their vicinity. It was unhandy to go to Brooklyn, and there was at this date but one Dutch church in New Jersey, that at Hackensack; and in fact there were only eight or ten ministers of all denominations in the whole state.

The Hackensack church had a stated pastor, and the Monmouth settlers desired one. They wanted preaching in the Dutch language. There was a Scotch church a few miles away; also a joint Scotch and English Quaker meeting-house at Topanemus; and also a Baptist church in Middletown township, but in all these the preaching was in English.

The result of the agitation was the establishment of the "Reformed Congregation of Freehold and Middletown," and a call to Rev. Joseph Morgan to become pastor. This is now the church of Marlborough, whose 200th anniversary will be celebrated in 1909.* He was installed Oct. 19, 1709, and probably preached in private houses until the erection of the first primitive church structure.

We have no account of the date of the actual building of the first church, but it must have been constructed immediately, so that either before or after the installation of Rev. Mr. Morgan the church was ready. Dr. Welles gives its probable location as Hendrickson's Hill, which is at present in Marlborough village, and almost directly in the rear of the present Reformed parsonage. The site seems to have contained a quarter of an acre, and possibly the first church was a schoolhouse and church combined. There was a building taken down on Hendrickson's Hill about 1820, which, says Dr. Welles, "was just such a building as a pioneer people would be likely to erect as a house of worship. It was about twenty feet square, with a steep gable roof. The sides were shingled. The door was in the middle of one of the sides, and was quite large. There were no partitions within, but one room occupied the whole space. Such a building would not have been erected for dwelling purposes. It was used as a dwelling in later years, but only after additions were built and alterations made. It was a very old building when taken down."

* In 1877 the 175th anniversary of this church was observed, and its pastor, Rev. Theo. W. Welles, later of Paterson, N. J., gave an historical discourse, which was printed. It contained many interesting facts concerning the early church not theretofore generally known.

This first building was used until Sept., 1732, when the new house of worship was erected on the present site of Marlborough church. This second building stood until 1826, when it was taken down and a third church erected, which is the same now in use.*

Pastor Morgan was really pastor of three congregations: of the Dutch church of Freehold, of the Dutch church of Middletown, and of the Scotch Presbyterian church of Freehold. He had been pastor of the latter, but, having acquired a fluent knowledge of the Dutch language, and being a preacher of recognized ability, he was requested to serve all these charges. Mr. Morgan was born in 1674, and is believed to have been a Welshman. He was ordained in Connecticut about 1697. He served at Bedford and East Chester, N. Y., and then at Hopewell and Maidenhead, N. J., before going to Monmouth county. He died about 1740, while acting as an evangelist in localities without churches, and lies in an unknown grave. He was a learned man, but, unfortunately, was given for a time to intemperate habits, which he finally overcame.

Among the first forty-nine members of the Church of "Freehold and Middletown" were Jacob van Doorn and his wife; and one of the first two deacons elected at the organization of the church was Jacob van Doorn, who, a little later, became an elder. On Oct. 20, 1709 (the year of the organization), Jacob had his son Abraham recorded in the church book as baptised, although, as the same entry was also on the Brooklyn church records, it is probable Abraham was baptised in Brooklyn.

Between 1709 and the time of his death ten years later, we know nothing of Jacob from any public records. As farmer and miller he was busily engaged in carrying on extensive business; as church elder he was looking after the religious wants of his vicinity; as father he was bringing up with pious care his interesting children.

THE DEATH OF JACOB.

Just when Jacob was engaged most in business and in rearing his large family; just when he was recognized as a large landowner and a man of influence in the church and the community; just when his grist mill was in perfect order and he began to be called "the miller;" and just when he was most prominent among those who were asking for better church and school facilities, so as to educate his children, he was taken ill, and it is supposed, lingered on under his illness for some eight or nine months, and then died. He was probably less than seventy years of age when he was removed from the scenes of his earthly labors. Of the nature of that illness we do not know.

* What was known in Jacob van Doorn's day as the "Reformed Congregation of Freehold and Middletown" is now the Reformed church of Marlborough. The latter name is of recent date. The old records of the Freehold and Middletown church are in possession of the Marlborough church, because the latter is the same church, now called "The Brick Church of Marlborough."

He died sometime between the execution of his will on April 24, 1719, and March 21, 1720, when it was probated; probably soon after the first of January, 1720.

Rev. Mr. Morgan must have preached the funeral sermon; for aught we know it was the precursor of solemn meetings, as the records show the first real "revival" occurred in the congregation in 1721, when twelve persons were added to the church, and the new proposed edifice was made a reality. It was the first break in the family; all were alive but the father, and he "was not, for God took him."

No one knows where Jacob van Doorn was buried. It was possibly upon his own farm, as the custom was. Yet it may have been that, because of his reputation as a man and citizen, and because his first daughter, Engeltje, had married into the Schenck family, that a resting-place was given to him in the Schenck-Couwenhoven Burying-Ground in Pleasant Valley. If the latter was the case, we can almost be sure of the spot where he was buried.

I visited this very old cemetery, so overgrown with trees and vines as to be a wooded thicket, in 1890, in company with the late Hon. Daniel P. Van Dorn, of Freehold, and again in 1907 in company with a member of the Herbert family of Wickatunk, and each time it gave me strange sensations. It is so secluded that it can scarcely be found among the present dense woods surrounding it, except by a guide. Each time, but especially at the last time, it was so full of under-brush and thorn vines that I could scarcely make an examination of the gravestones.

In one location, near a large tree and near the centre of the cemetery, I found three stones in a row in what appeared to be a "Van Dorn" plot. The central one was a mere boulder, rough and nearly disintegrated, standing about ten feet above the ground, without an inscription. To the right of it was a stone erected to Jacob's son "Aure," (known both as Arie and Aaron) the inscription on which reads:

"Here lies Interr'd the Body of AARON VAN DORN, who departed this life the fourth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and forty-eight, aged 55 yrs., 8 months and ____."

(The number of days was buried by earth and was undecipherable). To the left of it was one to Jacob, son of Aure, bearing this inscription:

"In memory of JACOB VAN DORN, who departed this life September 9th, 1785, Aged 52 years, 9 months, and 9 days."

There were no other stones immediately by these. Could the one small, rough, unlettered stone, between the two last stones named, be an uninscribed tombstone covering the mortal dust of Jacob? This was my thought about it, but the fact will never be known.*

Mrs. Lydia Conover, of Marlborough, who is a descendant of both the Schencks and Couwenhovens, feels sure that Jacob van Doorn must have been buried upon his own farm, that being the custom of the day, and there being no regular van Doorn cemetery. She adduces in proof of this the fact that a tombstone of Jacob's grandson, Isaac (son of Jacob's son, Jacob), who died in 1749, is now to be found in the kitchen cellar of the house erected by the second Jacob near Hillsdale; the hypothesis being that this was removed from some place on the farm; and it would go to show that up to 1749 there was no regular burial-place. But, on the contrary, Engeltje, the daughter of Jacob, married Roelif Schenck in 1718, after the Schenck-Couwenhoven Burying-ground had been established, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that so important a man as Jacob van Doorn might have had a place found for his remains in this Schenck-Couwenhoven enclosure. Certainly at a later date Jacob and Aure, the two sons of the first Jacob, were interred in that cemetery. The earliest stone now to be found there is said to be that of Nellie Couwenhoven (daughter of Albert), date of 1739. Few stones previous to that date were inscribed.

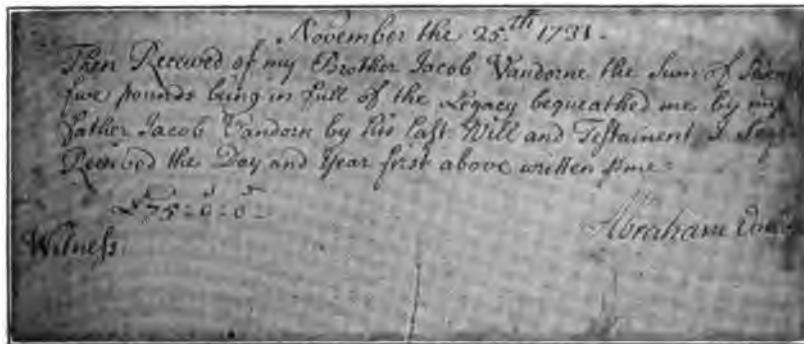

My conclusion is that the large boulder stone may or may not cover the grave of Jacob van Doorn.

This cemetery is upon land which was owned by Garret, father of Roelif, Jacob van Doorn's son-in-law. Garret was the first Schenck settler to come to Monmouth Co. from Long Island. Mrs. Conover cleared up this cemetery and fenced it in October, 1899, at her own expense, and put up a gateway to it. It is disgraceful that the descend-

* Were I more positive of it, I should try to insist that some of the thousands of Jacob's descendants should mark the spot, to-day, with something more worthy of the one man without whose existence his descendants could not have been, and without whose stable and splendid character they might not have had reason to be proud of the "van."

ants of those buried in that ground do not keep it in better condition.

I can add nothing further as to Jacob's general character than to say that tradition gives him a clean, white page from top to bottom. He was known as generous, kind, progressive, God-fearing; possessed of business tact and faithful to his engagements. His integrity and piety made an indelible impression upon his numerous children, who, with their immediate descendants, made the Van Dorn and Van Doren names honored wherever they were known.

The misspelling and other errors were common even to lawyers in 1720. The will was drawn by William Lawrence, Jr., one of the witnesses to it, a business man of Freehold township and a neighbor and friend of the testator. He evidently wrote English imperfectly.

Jacob van Doorn, like many others of his day, was inattentive to the correct spelling of his name. He had become “Englishified.” The following is a copy of his signature to his own will, taken from the original on file in Trenton:

Accompanying Jacob's will was an inventory (on file with the will in Trenton), which I give in full as of interest to his descendants:

The appraisers signing the foregoing were Wm. Laurence, Jr., G. Shomoff, Jan Schenck, John Bray.

The inventory was not footed up, but amounts to £139. 6. 0. Evidently Jacob, while a large land-owner, was otherwise not even at his death a wealthy man, there appearing no accounts due to him and no moneys loaned out; this supposing the inventory to have been complete.

THE DIVISION OF THE FARM.

Jacob's original farm of 676 acres was divided at his death, according to his will, between his eldest son Aure (written in the will "Arria") and his fourth son Jacob; presumably because Aure was his eldest son, and Jacob was his namesake. Aure took the eastern half, containing his father's house, and Jacob the western half. Both were joint owners of their father's mill, although Jacob subsequently built a mill of his own, which was just finished and running when he died in 1779.

Aure's bachelor son, Jacob, fell heir to Aure's land and interest in the old mill; then Aure's grandson, Jacob Couwenhoven. The latter left it to his sons Ruliff and Isaac, who lost it through mismanagement, and, in the year 1822, it was purchased by Sheriff John J. Ely, of Lewis Chamberlain. It descended to the sons, William and Thomas Ely, and to-day is in the possession of William H. Ely, and John S. Ely. When Sheriff Ely purchased the tract it embraced probably the whole of the original of Aure's estate, viz.: 359 41-100 acres. At present the Elys own 270 acres of it.

The western portion of the original farm of Jacob (first) went to his fourth son, Jacob. On this tract Jacob, Jr., built a new and commodious house in 1752. After his death, in 1779, it was willed to his sons, Isaac and Peter. Isaac probably did not live in it, but Peter did during his entire life, until his death in 1834. Both Peter and Isaac retained an interest in the old mill, also. It seems that for nearly a century or longer the mill was operated by the Van Dorn family.

On Peter's death the farm went to his son-in-law, Elisha Holmes, after which the half of it was sold to Joseph Cook for $28,000, and the other half went to his grandson, Jonathan Holmes. Cook sold to James Ham; the Ham estate sold to a Mrs. Pefferly, who sold it to Daniel Taylor, present owner. Jonathan Holmes sold his part to his cousin, Chrynanee Holmes, who sold it to William Carson, whose widow now resides on the place. The tract now occupied by Mrs. Carson embraces about 125 acres, and includes the house of 1752, built by Jacob Van Dorn (2d). One portion of the original farm, containing 22½ acres, has always remained in the Van Dorn family, having descended from Jacob (1st) to Jacob (2nd), to Peter, to William, and to the late Hon. Daniel P. Van Dorn.

There are no relics of Jacob which have come down to his descendants so far as known, except a silver cup now in possession of Mr. Jacob Dye Conover, of Middletown, N. J. It is the cup which, according to the family tradition, was offered by Jacob van Doorn at a race run on the King's Highway (the main street of Middletown) in 1699, and was won by a colt raised by Mr. van Doorn, and ridden by one of his slave boys. It has now been in possession of the Conover family for one hundred and fifty years, and descended to it through Williampe Conover, wife of Garret Van Dorn, she receiving it through Garret's father, Isaac Van Dorn, who was the son of Jacob Van Dorn, who was the son of the first Jacob van Doorn. This cup contains on it the inscription "V. D.," "I," and "M.," the "I" being the letter then used for Jacob, and "M" for his wife, Maria Bennet.

It is greatly to be regretted that Jacob's "great Byble" cannot be found; it might throw some light upon his immediate ancestry, and at least give the exact dates of his own birth and death and marriages.

I should like to believe that a spyglass, belonging to the writer, which tradition says came from Holland before the Revolution, and was in the possession of the family of Abraham Van Doren, of Griggstown, N. J. (the son of Christian, the second of Jacob's sons), was a part of Jacob's possessions, but I have no proof of it. It is about three feet long; a "small telescope." It was looked through by Washington, when he was at Rocky Hill. The late Tunis Q. Kline, of Burnt Mills, Somerset Co., N. J., a descendant of the family, was said to have had some article of copper or brass from the house of this first Jacob, but its whereabouts is now unknown to his surviving relatives.

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

Jacob's known family were mostly minors when he was called from them to the higher life. Their ages were:

	Years
Aure, his first(?) child.....	27
Engeltje, his second child.....	23
Christian, his third child.....	21
William, his fourth child.....	19
Jacob, his fifth child.....	17
Angenycie, his sixth child.....	15
Catherine, his seventh child.....	13
Abraham, his eighth child.....	11
Peter, his ninth child.....	8
Isaac, his tenth child.....	5

All of Jacob's sons who were old enough to labor were, so far as we know, employed on their father's farms, at the time of his death.

How long Maria van Doorn survived her husband cannot be told. She was living in 1734, fourteen years after Jacob's death, but no subsequent record of her has been found. I judge from the legacy receipts of Jacob's children that she died about the year 1735.

Of Jacob and Maria's ten children, while we know much about the most of them, we are certain of the death dates of only six: Aure, 1748; Engeltje, 1747; Angenycie, 1777; Jacob, 1779; Christian, 1781; Abraham, 1795. William married, but died young, probably about 1730; Peter was drowned when young, but we do not know just when; Isaac died some time during Revolutionary days.

How many have been born into the world since Jacob married Maria Bennet who could or can look back to that couple as progenitors, I cannot even surmise. This work definitely catalogues only about 2,500 of those born into the name of Van Dorn and Van Doren, but many more who were born into other surnames. Probably, if all the male and female lines could be run down to the year 1908, with not one name omitted, the total number would not be below 10,000; but this may be much below instead of above the true estimate.

The reason for this great number of descendants of one pair is not found in normal facts alone, but in abnormal conditions. The Van Dorn and Van Doren families have been exceptional in size, as witness the number of households which have had (like Jacob of the Scriptures) twelve children or more. In an Appendix I have given the names of the parents of that Scriptural number, or more, and I doubt if any other American line of families can excel it. It was and is a prolific stock.

CHAPTER VI.

THE CHILDREN OF JACOB VAN DOORN.

One of the singular things connected with the children of Jacob Van Doorn is that they married into such close relationships, not of blood but of families. The three eldest sons married three sisters. Arie married Antje Schenck; Christian married Altje Schenck; and Jacob married Maritje Schenck—in English Ann, Alche and Mary—all daughters of Captain John Schenck and Sarah Couwenhoven. Engeltje also married a Schenck, not of the same family, but related to it, and William married Altje Couwenhoven, who was the daughter of a Margaret Schenck. Practically, seven of Jacob's children married into two families. Angenycie and Catherine both married Wyckoffs. Abraham only went outside of these two families, if indeed, his second wife was not a Mary Wyckoff (which I have been unable to ascertain).

Only three of the sons, Christian, Jacob and Abraham, had male descendants who married, and who have male representatives living to-day. Christian and Abraham represent in a general way the two heads of the Van Doren families of the present time, and Jacob of the Van Dorn families, but there are exceptions.

It will be convenient to place here in order the known facts concerning the ten children of Jacob van Doorn.

FIRST CHILD, AURE VAN DORN.

Aure, first-known son (usually written "Arie;" on his tombstone "Aaron;" but, as signed by himself, "Aure"), was born in February, or March, 1693. He died Dec. 4, 1748, aged 55 years, 8 months and ——days, as recorded on his tombstone; the days being undecipherable. He was, therefore, four years of age when he accompanied his father from Gowanus to Monmouth County. He waited until he was thirty-seven years of age before he married (about 1730) Antje Schenck, a daughter of Jan Roelofse Schenck and Saartje (Sarah) Couwenhoven, a name which subsequently became Covenhoven, and is to-day known as Conover.

We know nothing concerning Aure (who was named from his mother's father, Arie Bennet), up to the time of his father's death, but he undoubtedly grew up as a farm hand, and was the mainstay of his father on the large Pleasant Valley farm at Hillsdale until his father's death, about 1720.

By his father's will Aure inherited the half of all his father's lands, and of his mill, to take effect, however, on the decease or re-marriage of his mother. The date of his mother's death is unknown, but, as stated, it is believed to have occurred about 1735. It is certain that Aure enjoyed the benefit of the devise of his father before his own death, which occurred Dec. 4, 1748, at the age of fifty-five years.

On May 25, 1725, Aure purchased of Thomas Davis, of Freehold, for the consideration of £500, a tract of 300 acres in Somerset County, "being part or parcel of a tract of 2,000 acres situate on the east side of the Millstone river, formerly patented on the 20th day of June, 1680, to William Dockwra, merchant of London," which land Dockwra had conveyed to Richard Davis, father of Thomas. This was in the same locality (between Millstone and Middlebush) where Aure's brothers, Christian and Abraham, settled about 1723. That Aure actually settled there himself I do not suppose. Certainly in 1731, and onwards, his children were baptized at Marlborough, and it is probable that he then resided on the eastern part of his father's farm, which was set off to him by the executors of his father's estate as his share of the homestead. (The deed referred to for the Somerset County tract may be found recorded in the Secretary of State's office, Trenton, Book K, p. 28.)

In 1737 Aure joined the Freehold and Middletown (Marlborough) church, and in 1743 his wife joined it.

Aure died, as above stated, in 1748, but his widow seems to have been living as late as 1785. He was buried in the Pleasant Valley burying-ground, where his tombstone now stands, containing the inscription given in full in the preceding chapter.

Aure's children were:

1. Mary, born 1731; married, 1750, John Couwenhoven of Middletown; and left descendants.
2. Jacob, born 1733, who probably resided on the homestead of his father; remained a bachelor and died in 1785.
3. Sarah, born (about) 1736; died before 1785, unmarried.
4. Ann, born 1738, died 1834; married, 1761, Cyrenius Van Mater, of near Colts Neck, and left descendants.
5. Eleanor, born 1742; died 1834, in her ninety-second year; married (1) Hendrick Smock of Freehold, and (2), Garret Hendrickson of Middletown. She left descendants by Hendrick Smock, but none by Garret Hendrickson.

Aure made a will, dated Sept. 3, 1748, probated June 23, 1749, the original of which is on file at Trenton. It begins by reciting that he was then "very sick," and provides: (1) That his wife "Ante" should continue to possess all his estate until his son Jacob became twenty-one. Then Jacob should receive the one-half of his land and mill for his own use, the other half remaining to the use of the widow during her life or widowhood. If she remarried she was to accept £100 in lieu of dower. (2) That his daughters, Mary, Sarah, Anne and "Nelle," should at their marriage receive from his personality £35 for their "outset." (3) That when Jacob arrived at twenty-one he should have £35 for his "outset." (4) That, after the death or remarriage of his wife, his personal estate remaining should go to his children, but that his wife's portion, including all the moiety in the grist-mill and lands left to him by his father, Jacob, and whatever he, Aure, had purchased afterward, should go to Jacob, who, however, should pay £400 in portions of £33.6.8 each year for twelve years to Aure's daughters, naming the years in which each should be paid. (5) To his brother, Isaac, he gave the possession of the tanhouse building and tan vats, then occupied by Isaac, and also the shoemaker's and merchant's shops, also occupied by Isaac as long as Isaac lived, after which they should go to Aure's estate. The witnesses to the will were William McConky, John Schenck, Jr., and Isaac Vandorn, Aure's brother. (Trenton Wills, Book E, p. 295).

The inventory of the estate of Aure, dated Sept. 4, 1748, and filed with his will, amounted to £581.5.2. It was made by his executors, and by appraisers, Johannis Bennet, Hendrickson Bennet and Roelif Schenck. It included two male negroes, one wench and three black children, four horses, two colts, twenty-eight sheep, five spinning-wheels, 109 bushels of wheat, 55 bushels of corn, 7 cows, a "syder-mill," and (what most of us suppose to be wholly a modern invention) a "mouse-trap." The inventory was not filed until March 21, 1750.

SECOND CHILD, ENGELTJE VAN DORN.

Engeltje, first daughter, was born on Long Island, Oct. 9, 1696, and died Sept. 20, 1747, when almost fifty-one years of age. In 1718 she married Roelof Schenck, brewer, a son of Garret R. Schenck, and Neeltje Coerte Van Voorhees. Her husband was born in 1697, and outlived her more than twenty years, dying in 1768. Roelof Schenck was the owner of a farm adjoining that of his father-in-law on the north.

Roelof's grandfather, Roelof Martense Schenck, was b. at Amersfoort, Utrecht, Holland, in 1619, and came to New Amsterdam with a brother, Jan, and sister, Annetje, in 1650. In 1660 he married Neeltje, daughter of Gerrit W. Van Couwenhoven. His two sons, Garret and Jan, settled in Monmouth County, about 1695. Garret lived on a farm in Pleasant Valley and died Sept. 5, 1745.

The only other dates I have of Engeltje is that she was a witness to baptisms in the church of Freehold and Middletown in 1717, and 1721, and also had her eleven children baptised at the same place. Engeltje's children by Roelof Schenck are given in Part II., under Engeltje (5).

THIRD CHILD, CHRISTIAN VAN DOREN.

Christian, second son, was born on his father's homestead, near present Hillsdale, Monmouth Co., N. J., Aug. 11, 1699, and was baptised in Brooklyn, Sept. 17, 1699. He died at Middlebush, Somerset Co., July 20, 1781, when nearly eighty-two years of age. He has always been noted as "the father of the seventeen children," whose descendants are now so numerous and so widely scattered.

Three years after his father's death, Christian and his brother, Abraham, purchased (1723) nearly a square mile of land to the north of the present Middlebush church, from Richard Salter, attorney for William Dockwra, a merchant of London. The whole tract contained 566 acres (consisting of five minor tracts), and was located on the north side of the present "Amwell road." The land Christian took into possession contained 400 acres (but he seems to have soon sold 41 acres), fronting on the aforesaid road, while Abraham had 166 acres to the north of Christian's westerly tract. Christian here built and lived in a log house about 150 yards northeast of the present Middlebush church. Abraham also built a house on his farm, in which he lived until his death. Christian's log house was pulled down later, and a frame one substituted, but this second building was erected about 500 yards west of the first structure.

Christian lived in this second house until his death, and the house stood for something over a century, when it was accidentally burned in December, 1859. Then a new building was put up on the old site. The barn on the place still contains the original frame put up by Christian.

On Dec. 11, 1723, which must have been immediately after he became possessed of his farm, he married Altje Schenck, then but eighteen years of age, the daughter of Jan Roelofse Schenck, and Sarah Couwenhoven, of Monmouth Co. She was a sister to the Antje who had married Christian's older brother, Aure. The parents of Altje Schenck settled on the farm now or recently owned by Edgar Schenck in Holmdel township. Jan Roelofse Schenck, and his wife, Sarah Couwenhoven, were cousins, and two of Sarah's brothers also married into the Schenck family. Jan Roelofse Schenck's will, proved June 3, 1753, is given in full in Beekman's "Early Dutch Settlers of Monmouth Co.," p. 4. Jan Roelfse and his wife were both buried in the Schenck-Couwenhoven burying-ground in Pleasant Valley.

The title to Christian and Abraham's land came into dispute about thirty-seven years later. From letters recently in the possession of the late Jacob Wyckoff, of Middlebush, it appears that Richard Salter, of Monmouth, acting on behalf of Dockwra, who lived in England, had exceeded his authority as an attorney of Dockwra in the execution of the original deed, but it is not exactly clear how. One of the letters from Henry Cuyler, Jr., acting for himself and Oliver Delancey, dated at New York, July 19, 1760, gives notice to Christian and Abraham: "That unless you speedily fall upon measures to Satisfy us for our Right we shall take such steps as will be proper for Recovering the same." The result was that, on Mar. 19, 1763, Christian and Abraham were obliged to repurchase their whole tract and pay therefor £1182.7s.6d., although they had actually had possession of it for forty years! This was a large sum to pay, but that they were able to do it shows that Christian and Abraham were then in good circumstances. The grantors of the new deed were Oliver Delancey and Henry Cuyler, Jr., of New York, and it is recorded at Trenton. (Secretary of State's office, Book A-3 of Deeds, p. 19).

In 1735, according to the tax list of that date, Christian was taxed for 350 acres of land and 18 cattle, his tax being £3. 4s.

On May 1, 1752, he purchased 246 acres of land on the south side of the Amwell road at Millstone from Benjamin Thompson for £740, probably to get a home for his son John, for, on Dec. 12, 1755, he sold the same to John for £100. John had married about 1749, and was the first of Christian's sons to marry.

Christian Van Doren was a well known man in his day. For many years during his residence at Middlebush he attended the Dutch church at New Brunswick, the only one in his vicinity. He had his first child baptised at the Marlborough church, but subsequently had baptisms at New Brunswick, where he was a member at least as early as 1735, and where he was elected a deacon in 1742, and an elder in 1752.

In 1766 he and his brother Abraham joined with sixty-eight other heads of families in petitioning for a minister to serve them at Millstone, and this resulted in the erection of the Millstone church in 1767, although neither Christian nor Abraham seem to have contributed to that building, nor to have joined that church, but continued to go to New Brunswick, and sometimes going also to the Dutch church at Six-Mile-Run. Christian's son, John, however, gave the land for the Millstone church.

It is known that Christian was a deeply religious, thoroughly conscientious man, and was interested in whatever built up the Middlebush and Millstone communities. He probably held local offices, though I have only found the record of one, that of commissioner of the highways, in 1752.

In local traditions much more has been said about Christian's wife, Altje, than about himself, doubtless for the reasons that she was an extraordinary woman in mental and religious characteristics, and because she lived to an extreme old age. Two of the anecdotes preserved of her were thus stated by the late Judge Ralph Voorhees in "Our Home":

"She was early accustomed to horseback riding. On account of the bad state of the roads and the want of bridges, the family were often obliged to go to church on horseback. Tradition states that on one Sabbath morning the parents started to church with ten of their children, all mounted, and each on a separate horse, the children leading, the parents following in the rear. Could that scene be reproduced on canvas, how striking and beautiful a view would it present of the manner of church-going in the olden time! . . . While living in the log house, a rattlesnake came through one of the openings in the stone chimney, and she, undaunted, seized him with a pair of tongs, put him into the fire, and held him there until he was dead." The Judge also says that "she rendered good service at the spinning wheel at the age of 92. In her 95th year, from the distance of nearly six miles, she gave constant attendance upon religious worship, in the First Reformed Church in New Brunswick. She was also an intimate friend of the sainted Jufrouw Hardenburgh. This old lady was a striking portraiture of a virtuous woman, as described by Solomon."

The following death notice of Mrs. Van Doren was published after her death, and had a wide circulation:

"Died on Sunday, the 17th of May, 1801, Middlebush, MRS. ALCHE VAN DOREN, widow of Mr. Christian Van Doren, aged 96 yrs., 1 mo., and 4 days. In her 93rd year her natural strength was so little abated that she was able from the distance of nearly six miles to give constant attendance upon public worship. Not less remarkable for her piety than for her natural vigor, her conversation uniformly adorned the Gospel which she professed. She was especially distinguished by the virtues of Humility, Patience and Meekness. She lived and died universally esteemed by her acquaintances, and has left a numerous offspring to lament her death. She had seventeen children, all of whom, except one, who died a young man, were married, 129 grandchildren, 200 great-grandchildren and 6 great-great-grandchildren. Total 352."

The exception as to the child who died a young man and did not marry, was Roeliff, the thirteenth child, who died from an accident.

Efforts have been made from time to time by the late Mr. Jacob Wyckoff, of Middlebush, and others, to account for all the 352 descendants of Christian and Altje Van Doren, who were said to have been born prior to her death in 1801, but without exact success. The writer has made up a table which is as correct as can now be made and which it may be of interest to publish:

There were undoubtedly some more great-grandchildren and perhaps more great-great-grandchildren who died in infancy, whose names I have been unable to discover, so that, probably, the original publication of the 352 descendants was correct, or as nearly so as could be ascertained at the time of Altje's death.

It is certainly a remarkable case; and I doubt if there is another instance in the United States where any man or woman has died leaving at the time of his or her death as many descendants, living and deceased, as did Altje Van Doren. She ought to have a special monument erected to her in the Cedar Grove Cemetery at Middlebush, which was originally the "Christian Van Doren Cemetery," established by him in 1743.

This Cedar Grove Cemetery is beautiful in its location and contains many fine monuments. It has two very small round head stones covering the spot where Christian and Altje were interred. These stones are respectively about a foot and a half high, Christian's being the smaller, and are of brown sandstone, inscribed simply:

"C. V. D. aged 82, 1781."
"A. V. D. aged 96, 1801."

This Cedar Grove cemetery was originally a portion of the farm of Christian Van Doren, who owned throughout his life 350 acres of it. The farm of his brother, Sheriff Abraham Van Doren, adjoined and contained 166 acres. In 1873 these two farms were divided into seven farms, owned by Walter J. Toulmin, Ellen V. Egbert, Marcus Bennett, Mr. Burbank, Mr. Woolsey, Mr. Vreeland, and John B. Welsh. Mr. Welsh was said to be living on the "homestead part" which I suppose referred to the part where Christian's house stood. The late Judge Ralph Voorhees wrote concerning it ("Our Home," p. 338): "A new building has since been put up on the old site, and is the one occupied (in 1873) by John B. Welsh. The old house has recently undergone remodeling and repairs, but yet contains the same original frame. Christian was early known as a great raiser of wheat. His land at the time of his clearing was pronounced the best adapted to raise wheat of any in that section of the country."

Now (1908), it is said the farms which constituted the tract of Christian and Abraham are owned by the following: J. Howard Garretson, son-in-law of Mr. Toulmin; a person from New York City, name unknown, who has the Egbert place; a Mr. Shearer; Fred. Wilson, who has the Burbank place; Mr. Woolsey; Mr. Thomas Connors, and Mr. Asher Wilson, son-in-law of Mr. Welch. It is Mr. Asher Wilson, therefore, who owns the homestead part occupied by Christian, and whose barn must still contain a portion of the original barn of Christian.

On Oct. 21, 1773, Christian made his first will, which was not proved. The original was in the possession of the late Jacob Wyckoff, of Middlebush. From this will I secured the signatures of Christian and his brother Abraham, reproduced on page 30, which show how the two brothers early differed in the spelling of their name. Christian wrote "Vandoren," and Abraham, who was a witness to the will, "Vandorn." This will appeared to be in the handwriting of Abraham.

The final will of Christian, however, dated May 24, 1780, probated Aug. 27, 1781 (Trenton Wills, Book M, p. 98), which stated that he was then "weak in body, but of sound and perfect mind and memory, thanks be given unto Almighty God therefor," thus disposed of his "worldly estate wherewith it hath pleased God to bless me in this life:" (1) To "Altye, my beloved wife, all my plantation whereon I now live, with all my negroes, stock, household goods and utensils of husbandry as long as she shall continue my widow, and in case she shall happen to marry then she shall deliver and surrender the same to my executors for the use of my children." (2) After his wife's remarriage, or death, his sons, Cornelius and Benjamin, to have the farm "containing about 350 acres," Benjamin to have 200 acres on the west end with the buildings, and the remainder to go to Cornelius. The woodland to be divided to each in proportion to the quantity of cleared land. They to pay for the land £1400 in proportion to the quantity of land each should have. (3) To his sons, Jacob, William, Peter, Abraham, John, Aaron, Christian, Isaac and Joseph, and daughters, Mary, Sarah, Altje, Nelly and Jenny, each £100, to be paid by Cornelius and Benjamin. (4) The remainder of his personal estate to be divided between Cornelius and Benjamin. (5) His sons, William, Abraham and Christian, to be the executors.

Christian's children were:

1. Jacob, born 1724. He married (1) Phebe Van Derveer, and (2) Jane Ditmars. He early removed to Bedminster township, where he purchased 283 acres of land near the present town of Bedminster, but subsequently removed to Bernards township and died there in 1811. He was the father of Captain Jacob Van Doren, of Shepherdstown, W. Va.; of Phebe Van Doren, who married Samuel Lewis; of Elizabeth Van Doren, who married John Annin, and others.

2. John, born 1726, died 1815, in his eightieth year. He married Martha Lott, resided at Millstone, and was prominent in connection with the Millstone church. He is the John Van Doren at whose house General Washington often stopped when passing through New Jersey, and his house still stands as one of the most interesting landmarks of Revolutionary days. Among the children of this John were: John, William and Jacob I., of Millstone; Cornelius, of near Albany; Christianus, of Neshanic; and Abraham, of White House.

3. William, born 1727; died 1786; married (1) Catherine Hoff and (2) Maria Wyckoff. He was a farmer of Middlebush, and among his children were: Christian, of Charlestown, N. Y., one of whose grandchildren was the late Abram B. Van Doren of Chicago; Bergun, of Pluckamin, N. J.; William, of Cato, N. Y.; and Alche, wife of John A. Powelson, of Pluckamin, N. J.

4. Maria, born 1729, died 1822, aged ninety-three. She resided at South Branch, and was the wife of Petrus Nevius, and left numerous descendants.

5. Aaron, of near Ringoes, N. J., born 1730; died 1792. He was a merchant, who married Margaret Stillwell. Among their children were: John, of Reaville; Christopher, of Readington, and Alche, of near Lambertville, who married Robert Laning.

6. Sarah, born 1732; died 1816, in her eighty-fifth year. She married (1) Jeremiah Lambert, and (2) Robert Hood, and resided at Neshanic. She left no descendants.

7. Christian, born 1734; died 1783. He married (1) Alche Van Bryck and (2) Maria Nevius. He resided at Pluckamin, Neshanic and Harlingen. Among his children were: Bernardus, of Bunker Hill, Ind., one of whose grandchildren is William T. Van Dorn, the successful inventor, of Chicago; and Christianus, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., and Preble Co., Ohio, whose children married into the Spacht, Curry, Greer and other families.

8. Alche, born 1735; died 1828, aged ninety-three years. She married Simon Wyckoff, of Middlebush, and her descendants included the late Mr. Jacob Wyckoff, of Middlebush; the late Christian Wyckoff, of Lamington; Joseph V. D. Wyckoff, of Laingsburgh, Mich., and others. This family is very large and is given a separate place in an Appendix to this volume.

9. Nelly, born 1737, who died in 1796, aged 55. She married Jacques Voorhees, of Middlebush, one of the leading financial men of Somerset Co., in his day, a farmer and merchant, who was also an importer of wines from Madeira. His descendants married into the Quick, Van Liew, Hardenbergh, DeMott, Brunson and other families. Among his many present living descendants is Mrs. John S. Clark, who lives on a portion of the original estate of Jaques Voorhees at South Middlebush, N. J.

10. Abraham, born 1738; died 1805. He married Anne Van Dyke, and was a miller and farmer at Griggstown. It was at his house where the interesting events occurred at the visit of Washington and his officers during the Revolution, which are narrated in an Appendix to this volume. Among his children were: Rev. Isaac Van Doren, so well known for his "Ladies' Institutes" and his Christian piety and example, and for his equally distinguished sons; Abraham, who succeeded his father as miller and farmer at Griggstown; Jacob, of Raritan, one of whose grandsons is P. A. V. van Doren, Esq., of Princeton; Maria, who married the late Judge Peter S. Nevius, and was the grandmother of the author of this volume.

11. Peter, born 1740; died 1820. He was a farmer of Millstone, and married Frances Hoff. Among his children were Peter P., of Six-Mile-Run, and Abram P., of Millstone.

12. Jane, born 1741. She married John Sutphen of Hunterdon County, resided at Ten-Mile-Run, and left numerous descendants, but I have been unable to trace them.

13. Roeliff, born 1743; died 1762, from an accident when about nineteen years of age.

14. Isaac, born 1744; died 1828. He resided at Neshanic, where he owned mills, and married Sarah Opie. Among his children were William O., of North Branch; Capt. Abraham I., of Montgomery; Sarah, who married George Hall; Alletta, who married James La Tourette, and resided at Canton, Ill.; Grace, who married Abram H. Moore, of Bushnell, Ill., and Isaac, of Fremont, O., who became a member of the Illinois House of Representatives.

15. Cornelius, born 1746; died 1834. He was a farmer of Middlebush, and married Elizabeth Wyckoff. Among his children was Cornelius, of Bound Brook, father of the late John B. Van Doren of that place.

16. Joseph, born 1748; died 1801. He was a miller and farmer of South Branch, and married Sarah Vanderbilt. Among his children was Maria, wife of Dr. Peter Vredenburgh, whose descendants, among others, number Judge William H. Vredenburgh, of Freehold; James B. Vredenburgh, Esq., of Jersey City; and L. R. Vredenburgh, Jr., Esq., of Somerville.

17. Benjamin, born 1751; died 1804. He resided on the home-stead at Middlebush as a farmer, and married (1) Sophia Van Dyke, and (2) Dinah Ditmars. Among his children were Sophia, who married Simon Wyckoff of Middlebush (father of the late Jacob Wyckoff); Joseph of Middlebush; Benjamin of New Germantown, (grandfather to the Drs. Hedges of Plainfield).

It will be observed that none of Christian's children strayed very far from the parental roof, but remained in Somerset, or in adjoining counties.

FOURTH CHILD, WILLIAM VAN DORN.

William, the third son, was born in Pleasant Valley about 1701; the record of his baptism has not been found. He married Altje Couwenhoven, daughter of Cornelius Couwenhoven and Margaret Schenck. She was probably born about 1702, but neither the date of her death nor that of William is known. He died when comparatively a young man about 1730, leaving one daughter, Mary, who married Albert Couwenhoven. William's widow married, about 1731, Abram Vandeventer; and again, in 1739, Cornelius Middagh. William, therefore, left no male descendants.

FIFTH CHILD, JACOB VAN DORN.

Jacob, fourth son, was born near Hillsdale, N. J., 1703, and lived until seventy-six years of age, dying Feb. 26, 1779. He married, about 1729, Maritje Schenck, daughter of Jan Roelofse Schenck and Sarah Couwenhoven, a sister to the Altje and Antje who married his brothers, Aure and Christian. She was born Aug. 8, 1712, and died Oct. 31, 1756. Jacob then married, for his second wife, in 1763, Mrs. Rachel Longstreet, née Schenck, of Shrewsbury, widow of Guisbert Longstreet. It is a singular fact that, three years before his second marriage, Jacob's son William, who settled at Peapack, Somerset Co., married Rachel Longstreet, a daughter of Guisbert Longstreet and this Rachel Schenck, so that Jacob married his son's mother-in-law. After the death of Jacob, in Feb., 1779, his widow, Rachel, hastened to marry the third time, in 1779, Tunis Denise.

Rachel was the daughter of Garret R. Schenck and Neeltje Coerte Van Voorhees, and was a sister of Roelof Schenck, the brewer, who had married Jacob Van Dorn's sister, Engeltje; so that, both through the marriage of his sister and his son, Jacob was by law (not blood) related to his second wife, Rachel.

Jacob Van Dorn under his father's will received, after his mother's death, about one-half of his father's landed estate. His farm comprised 317 acres. On this farm Jacob built a house during the year 1752, which still exists, although largely added to by subsequent owners. It is the house now occupied by Mrs. William Carson on the road leading from Holmdel to Marlborough. It stands in a strikingly beautiful situation, containing in front of it two immense willow trees of great age and a growth of tall locust trees. There was originally a barn by the roadside. The well which Jacob dug is near the house; the house contains some of the original shingles. As this is the oldest known house in existence that has belonged to any member of the Van Dorn family, I present a picture of it, as it now appears, on the opposite page.

An interesting tradition concerning Jacob and his mill is related by Mrs. Margaret Vanderveer, of Asbury Park, to this effect: That her father told her that his grandfather Jacob (the Jacob Van Dorn of whom we are speaking) was one day in his mill near Holmdel, when a boy came in, who he thought had been saucy to him. Jacob gave him a good whipping, but found out afterward that he had punished the wrong boy. "Well," said he, "I dare say you have deserved a threshing a great many times when you did not get any; so this good one will answer for those numerous omissions."

The late Ferdinand Van Dorn, of Peapack, remembered to have heard his grandfather, Aaron, who was one of the sons of this Jacob Van Dorn, say that Jacob had built a new mill on his property and had just got it started when he died, and that the suspicions of the neighborhood were that negroes had poisoned him.

Jacob did not become a member of the church at Marlborough until 1750, his name then being entered on the record as "Jacob Van Doorn," unless the record refers to his nephew, son of Aure. Like his brother Christian, Jacob was born near Hillsdale, but was baptized at Brooklyn, there being no Dutch church at the time in Monmouth County.

On Oct. 23, 1756, Jacob, with his brother Isaac, who remained a bachelor, and his nephew Jacob, who also remained a bachelor (son of Aure Van Dorn), leased from Joseph Throckmorton, Jr., of Monmouth, one half of the sixteenth part of all the mines and minerals discoverable on the tract whereon Nicholas Golder dwelt in Somerset County. The consideration was £12.10s. The lessees were to pay one-half and Throckmorton one-half of the cost of mining, and were to have one-half of the product. They agreed not to keep above four men employed about the mine, except by mutual consent. Jacob, the son of Aure, signed his name as "miner." (Paper in possession of the late Hon. Daniel P. Van Dorn). It is probable that the nephew, Jacob, worked the mine, but of what nature were the "minerals" and what was the result is not known.

When Jacob was a young man of twenty-two years of age he became possessed of a new but small Bible, which is now in the possession of the family of the late Hon. Daniel P. Van Dorn. It contains on the fly-leaves, in Jacob's handwriting, under date of June 16, 1725, some verses of Scripture, and on Oct. 7, 1730 were added the following curious verses of his own composition:

"october the 7th . . 1730.

JACOB VAN DORN "

These exceedingly crude verses show the young man's deep piety, which continued throughout his life. In fact, all his brothers and sisters and his descendants for many generations were thoroughly religious as well as prosperous people.

On April 13, 1743, Jacob purchased more land to add to his large farm, the deed being from Richard Salter, John Bowne and Aria Bennet, the latter being Jacob's cousin.

In 1772 he purchased at sheriff's sale of Thomas Leonard, Sheriff, more land in Freehold township, and re-conveyed it, May 3, 1774, to John Lloyd. (Trenton Deeds, Book G, 3, p. 504).

When Jacob was forty-two years of age he was ill, and he then prepared and executed two wills, dated only one day apart, which were never destroyed, although made ineffective by a will of thirty-three years later, just prior to his death. The two early and inoperative wills were in the possession of the late Hon. Daniel P. Van Dorn, and are interesting as showing the peculiar manner in which he proposed to divide his estate among his children. He had at that time but six children, and his first wife, Mary, was living. After providing that his wife should have full possession of his place, which is described as "the half of the whole estate that was left to my brother Aria and myself by the last will and testament of our father Jacob Vandorn, deceased, which was his whole estate in lands, with his mill and improvements on at that time," and that if she married again she was to have £100 out of his movable estate, to be paid to her within one year after her marriage, he directed a division of his real and personal estate (presumably to be divided after his wife's death or remarriage) into sixteen parts: Jacob to have three and one-quarter parts; John to have three parts; William to have two and three-quarter parts; Isaac to have two and one-half parts; Sarah to have two and one-quarter parts; Aria to have two and one-quarter parts. If his wife died or married again the executors were to educate the children and to bind them out to trades.

Jacob's actually probated will, dated Oct. 26, 1778, and proved Apr. 19, 1779 (Trenton Wills, Book 21, p. 133) gave all his real estate to his sons Isaac and Peter, the provisions thereof being the following: To his wife Rachel, £10, to be paid yearly, and the choice of one room in his dwelling, and firewood and a negro boy to make her fires; also 20 lbs. of flax and 5 lbs. of wool yearly, etc. (2) To his son John's children, £250, to be divided between them. (3) To William, £250. (4) To Aaron, £250. (5) To Sarah, wife of John Antonides, £200 and her mother's large cupboard. (6) To Mary, wife of John Schenck, £200. (7) To Anne, wife of Lewis "Tomson," £200. (8)

To Isaac and Peter his "mills, lands and meadows, and all my real and personal estate," as tenants in common. (9) The executors to be his sons, Isaac and Peter.

Eventually his son Peter came into possession of Jacob's farm; then it went to Peter's son in-law, Elisha Holmes, after whose death half of it was sold for $28,000, and the balance became the farm of Elisha's grandchild, Jonathan Holmes. He sold it to his cousin, Chry-nance Holmes, who sold it to William Carson, whose widow now owns it.

Jacob's signature appears on page 30.

Jacob's children were ten in number:

1. Jacob, born 1731; died 1761; unmarried.

2. John, born 1733; died perhaps about 1800. He settled near Peapack, but in Morris County, and married Agnate Schenck, his cousin, daughter of Roelof Schenck and Engeltje Van Dorn. If I mistake not, his wife was known later as "Anna," and was the Anna Van Dorn, who, with John Hulse, was appointed administratrix of the estate of a John Van Dorn in 1800. Among his children was Jacob of Chester township, Morris County; but the records concerning the children of this John are trifling, and the living descendants of John's children, if any, have not been discovered to a certainty.

3. William, born 1736; died 1816. He settled at Peapack, Somerset County, and married Rachel Longstreet, who lived but three years after the marriage. William did not marry again. William had only two children, Guisbert, of Peapack, who married Phebe Beach, and Jacob, of Peapack, who married Margaret Hunt, and among whose descendants of the present day are Joseph H. Van Doren, cashier of the First National Bank, Morristown; the late ex-Judge John Jeroloman, of New York City; Mrs. William E. Westervelt, of Paterson; Mrs. Wallace McGeorge, of Camden; William J. Van Doren, of Stronghurst, Ill., and others.

4. Isaac, born 1739; died 1749.

5. Sarah, born 1741; died 1825. She married John Antonides, resided at Dutch Lane, near Freehold, and left numerous descendants.

6. Aaron, born 1744; died 1830. He married (1) Ghacy Schenck, and (2), when seventy-seven years of age, Margaret Hurd. He was a farmer residing near Peapack, Somerset Co., N. J., and had a long line of descendants, many of whom have been of unusual ability. Among his children were: Jacob of Ariesville, N. Y.; Judge Peter A., of Port Gibson, Miss., whose son, Earl, was the distinguished Confederate General of that name; William A., of Peapack, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Somerset Co., one of whose children was the late Ferdinand Van Dorn, of Peapack, miller and inventor, who died in 1902, when nearly ninety-six years of age; and Gilbert, of Vans Valley, Ohio.

7. Mary, born 1746; died 1808. She married Captain John Schenck, of Penns Neck, N. J., a distinguished officer in the Revolutionary War, and left many descendants.

8. Isaac, born 1752; died 1831. He was a captain in the Revolution, who married Anne Conover, but left only one child to grow up, Garret, who married, but died without issue.

9. Peter, born 1755; died 1834. He resided on the homestead at Hillsdale, and married Jane Williamson. Among his children were: Mary, who married Rulof Smock, of Holmdel; Jacob P., of Englishtown; Albert, of Freehold; Williampe, of Warren County, Ohio, who married Benjamin DuBois, M. D., son of the Rev. Benjamin DuBois, who was for sixty-two years pastor of the Marlborough Dutch church; John, of Marlborough; William, of Marlborough, father of the late Hon. Daniel P. Van Dorn, of Freehold; Captain Isaac P., of Freehold; Peter P., of Marlborough; Arthur, of Marlborough; Jane who married Elisha Holmes of Hillsdale; and Sarah, who married Pierson Hendrickson, of Red Bank.

10. Anne, born 1756; died 1849, at Somerville. She married Lewis Thompson, who was a British officer in the Revolution, and spent some years after the war in Nova Scotia. Among their children was the late Colonel William Thomson, lawyer, of Somerville.

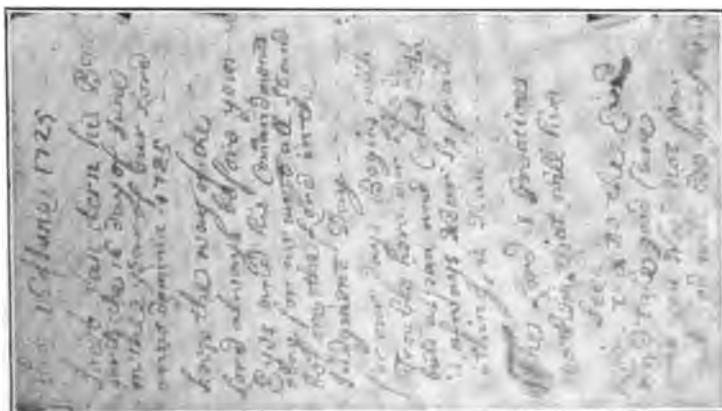

SIXTH CHILD, ANGENYCTIE VAN DORN.

Angenyctie, second daughter, was baptized at Brooklyn, Mar. 29, 1705, and died in 1782, aged seventy-seven years. She married, about 1728, William Wikoff, probably the son of Jan Pieterse Wikoff and Neeltje Couwenhoven, of Flatlands, L. I., who settled in Monmouth County about 1702. He was a farmer, but little is known of him. Angenyctie joined the Marlborough church in 1731, and her husband in 1745. They had fourteen children, and their descendants are scattered all over the country. Among their children were: Peter, who was an Aide to General Washington at the Battle of Monmouth, and was the grandfather of the Chevalier Henry Wykoff, once editor of the "Democratic Review;" and Eleanor, who married Colonel John Conover, of Marlborough. Among the general descendants were:

OLD HOUSE OF CORNELIUS COUWENHOVEN, OF PLEASANT VALLEY, N. J.

Here William Van Dorn (1801) son of the first Jacob, courted his wife, Altje Couwenhoven. The house is now occupied by Henry Conover. Dates from soon after 1700.

Colonel William Wikoff of the Revolutionary War; Isaac Wikoff, who married Miss Giousa, sister to the last Spanish Governor of Louisiana, etc. A large number of the male descendants of Agnes Van Dorn (her name in later life became "Agnes") and William Wikoff were graduates of Yale and Princeton colleges, and men of education, and of more or less note.

SEVENTH CHILD, CATHERINE VAN DORN.

Catherine, third daughter, was probably born in 1707, but the date of her death is unknown. She married Cornelius Wyckoff, who resided in Somerset County. Her name appears on the records of the First Reformed Church of Somerville in 1741. Her husband, Cornelius, was the son of Corneles Claesen Wicof and Adriaentje Luyster, who went from Flatlands, L. I., and settled at Middlebush, N. J., about 1715. Catherine's children were only two in number, who have not been further traced.

The writer has in his possession the original receipt given by Catherine for the legacy from her father of £75, which reads:

"November 2-1737

"then received of my brother Jacob Vandorn the sum of Seventy five pounds with the interest being in full of the Legacy bequeathed me by my father Jacob Van Dorn by his Last will and Testament I say Received by me the day and year first above mentioned witness my hand

The signature of Catherine ("Cetie," as she wrote it) to the above receipt, is reproduced on page 30.

EIGHTH CHILD, SHERIFF ABRAHAM VAN DORN.

Abraham, fifth son, was born in 1709, and was baptised (probably) in Brooklyn, Oct. 20, 1709. The record of his baptism appears in Brooklyn, but is also entered in the books of the Dutch church at Marlborough. The reason for the latter entry possibly is, that this church, known as the church of "Freehold and Middletown," was organized that year with Abraham's father, Jacob, as member and deacon, and it seemed desirable to open the records with that baptism. As it stands there, it is the first baptism recorded within the bounds of that congregation.

Except as to the number of his children, Abraham became a man of greater local importance than his brother Christian, or indeed of any of his brothers, because he served the county of Somerset as sheriff for a longer period than any sheriff before or since.

Abraham was but eleven years old at the time of his father's death. In 1731 he received in full the legacy from his father's estate (£75).

The author has in his possession the original receipt given by Abraham for this legacy of £75 from the estate of his father, reading as follows:

" November the 25th 1731

" Then Received of my Brother Jacob Vandorne the Sum of Seventy five pounds being in full of the Legacy bequeathed me by my father Jacob Vandorn by his last Will and Testament I say Received the Day and Year first above written by me

ABRAHAM VANDORN "

" £75 - Os. - Od.

Abraham was at this time twenty-two years of age and his signature to the above receipt shows a cramped, unformed hand, as follows:

In later life, when Sheriff of Somerset co., he wrote quite a different signature, as will be seen by comparing the foregoing with his later autograph given on page 30.

About the same year Abraham married Eleanor Forman, daughter of Jonathan and Margaret Forman,* of near Freehold, who was only about eighteen years of age. She died May 22, 1733 (perhaps within two years after their marriage). This early marriage was discovered by the writer when visiting the old Scots burying ground in Pleasant Valley, near Hillsdale (the same in which Abraham's father was buried). The stone reads as follows:

" Here Lies Interr'd the Body of Elinor, Wife of ABRAHAM VAN DORN and Daughter of Jonathan and Margaret Forman, who Departed this life may the 22 Day Annoq. Domini 1733 Aged Twenty years and five months."

When Abraham married he must have been a resident of Middlebush, Somerset County, because he there purchased land, in conjunction with his brother Christian, in 1723. The particulars of this land purchase have already been given.

Abraham was on the church books of the First Dutch Church of New Brunswick in 1732 as a church member, and was a deacon of the same church in 1752 and 1757. Judge Ralph Voorhees (in "Our Home," p. 53) said of him that he was converted under the preaching of George Whitefield, but this could not be, as Whitefield's famous evangelistic services, which produced so deep an impression in New Jersey and elsewhere, were not begun in this state until 1741. It may be that Abraham dated a special conversion of himself from that noted period.

About 1734 he married Morrity (Maria) ——. I have nowhere found the last name of this wife, but there are circumstances to indicate that she might have been a Wyckoff.

Abraham remained a farmer at Middlebush during his entire life, but did not become rich. On the Franklin tax list of 1735 he was taxed on 150 acres and ten cattle, and he owned the same land at his death.

Abraham is best known, however, as the "Sheriff of Somerset County," for an extraordinarily long term. His commission from Governor Belcher is dated Feb. 27, 1753, and he continued to be sheriff until 1771. We find on one record the statement that he was probably appointed earlier, about 1750. William McDonald succeeded him as sheriff in 1771. In those days "graft" had not reached our local offices, and office-holders did die poor! Abraham was never a wealthy man.

It was during his shrievalty that the locally famous execution of a negro by burning occurred, which was thus described in "Our Home," by the late Judge Voorhees: "It was at Millstone, 1752, that a negro named Abram Van Neste was convicted there and then under English laws of murdering his master and condemned to be burned. Sheriff Van Dorn enforced the penalty. It is said that many of the negroes of the surrounding country were present, forming the inner, while the whites formed the outer, circle around the fire. During the burning, the Sheriff mounted his horse with a drawn sword in hand, and rode between the spectators and the fire, to keep the former at a proper distance."

The following account of the same affair is taken from Snell's "History of Hunterdon and Somerset Counties," p. 759: "On 22d of June, 1724, Peter Van Nest [who had received a patent of 600 acres of land at the junction of the North and South branches of the Raritan river] conveyed the north half of this property to his son Peter, who, on the 2d of April, 1752, conveyed the westerly part, containing 213 acres, to his son Jacob. He lived only a year after this conveyance, being brutally murdered in December, 1753. The occasion is said to have been the taking of a leaf of tobacco out of the negro's box by his master. Mr. Van Nest had been out on horseback and returned home at night. The negro stood inside the stable door and struck him with an ax, as he was about to put up his horse. He then turned the horse loose, with the saddle turned under him, dragged the body some distance, and buried it under the leaves at the root of a large tree that was upturned. Search was soon instituted, the negro joining in the search. After considerable time the body was found. Suspicion was directed toward the negro as he was considered dangerous. He was a large, athletic man, and the friends and neighbors were afraid to arrest him. He was sent out to bring a back log for the fire, and, while this was in his arms, he was taken when he could not defend himself. His master's pocket knife was found upon him. He was at once taken to the county seat, then at Millstone, tried and condemned to be burned publicly at the stake." (The date given above as December, 1753, should have been December, 1752).

This story has been variously repeated in different publications, but was supposed to be based mainly on tradition. I find a verification of it, however, in the newspapers of the time, from which the following accounts are taken. They are most curious as showing the superstition to have been still prevalent, that, if the murderer were to be made to touch the body of his victim, blood would gush forth.

"We have an account from the North Branch of Rariton, in New-Jersey, of a barbarous and cruel Murder committed there on Wednesday the 13th Instant, on the Body of Mr. Jacob Vaneste by his own Negro, in Conjunction with another of his Neighbours: It seems all the provocation was Mr. Vaneste's taking a little of the Fellows' tobacco; and that Evening having been on a Visit to Dr. Van Wagenen's, his Neighbour, the two Negroes Way-laid him and knock'd him off his Horse; they then with an Ax split his Skull, and Dragg'd him a little out of the Road; The Horse coming home soon after without his Master, gave some Alarm and the next Day proper Search being made, he was found. His Negro was thereupon taken up, and brought before the Coroner's Inquest; and being made to touch his Master's body, the Blood suddenly gushed out of the dead Man's Nose and Ears, as it likewise did from the Negro's, who thereupon being stung with Guilt confessed the Crime, and was, together with his Accomplice, directly sent to Jail in order to receive their just Demerit." (From "The N. Y. Gazette," Dec. 25, 1752).

From an undated English newspaper of about a month later, in a news item, dated New York, January 1, this is stated: "We hear from New-Jersey, that the Negro Fellow who committed the Murder on the Body of Mr. Jacob Van Este, his Master (as lately mentioned) was burnt at Millstone, on Wednesday last: He stood the fire with the greatest intrepidity, and said, they had taken the Root, but left the Branches." (See N. J. Archives, Vol. 19, pp. 228, 230, 231.)

As there were no newspapers published in New Jersey at this date, the advertisements of the sheriff were by written posters. But one published advertisement of Sheriff Van Dorn in the N. Y. "Gazette" of June 3, 1754, reads as follows:

"Broke out of Somerset Goad the 20th of May last, two Prisoners who were committed on Suspicion of Felony, one of them named Enoch Hannawell, 23 years of Age, 5 Foot 8 Inches high, has a young-like look: Had on when he went away a blue-grey homespun Coat, Waistcoat and Breeches, Stockings almost the same Colour, and a Linnen Cap; he was born at Westchester, in New York Government. The other about 30 Years of Age, 5 Foot 7 Inches high, thick set, with black Hair and Beard, thick Legs, sour Look, named John Murphy: Had on when he went away, a light colour'd Kersey Jacket, no Coat, old bluish mix'd Stockings, old Shoes. Whoever secures the above mentioned Persons and brings them to the Sheriff of Somerset, or secures them, so that he may have them again, shall have Forty Shillings Reward for each of them, and all reasonable Charges, paid by

ABRAHAM VANDORN, Sheriff.

Prior to the time when Abraham became sheriff the court house for Somerset County was removed from Six-Mile Run (now Franklin Park) to Millstone, only three miles from his farm at Middlebush. But he probably never resided at Millstone.

At the close of the Revolutionary War, Abraham, with Nathaniel Ayres and Abraham Staats, served on a committee to adjust the damages done to property holders by the British.

Otherwise I have found no records concerning him until his death, not above stated, except that in 1766 he petitioned for a church to be established at Millstone, but did not contribute to the erection of a building, nor join the church, though he did subscribe £2.5.0, in 1777, toward the last payment on the parsonage.

Abraham died in January, or February, 1795. His will, dated Oct. 13, 1794, probated Feb. 13, 1795 (Trenton Wills, Book 33, p. 537), gave: (1) To his son, Abraham, 106 acres of his homestead. (2) To his son, Jacob, the remainder of his land, containing 50 acres. (3) To his son, Abraham, two negro men, Tom and Jack, and his wench, Lyfe; also his Dutch Bible, etc. (4) To his daughter, Anne, his negro wench, Jinnow. (5) The balance of his estate "consisting of a negro wench and three negro children, and some household and kitchen furniture," to his daughters, Nelly, Mary, Catherine and Anne, and to the heirs of his daughter, Phebe. (6) His executors to be Abraham and Jacob.

Abraham's family Bible is now in the possession of his great-grandson, Abraham Van Nest Van Doren, of Phoenix, Arizona, the fourth Abraham of the family to possess the Bible. From this Bible record we are able to obtain the names and dates of birth of some of Abraham's children which otherwise could not have been known. The record is so nearly faded out, however, that some portions are undecipherable. The present owner states that in the lifetime of his father it was loaned out, and on its return some of the leaves containing written family records were torn out of it. The author had hoped that this Bible might give some clew as to the parentage, and also brothers and sisters, if any, of Abraham's father, Jacob, but now this chance is lost. No Bible belonging to either of the brothers or sisters of Abraham is known to exist.

In this Bible the names of three grandchildren are entered in this manner:

"Dec th 5 day 1762 then was born our grandchild Kosea.

"Dec the 15 day 1764 then was born our grandchild Mariah.

"On Sept th 22 day 1767 then was born our grandchild Derrick."

There is no clue as to whose children they were, whether of a son or of one of his daughters. There was a "Kosia Van Doren" at Bound Brook in 1812, who may have been the same "Kosea" named above; if so, then the grandchildren were children of one of Abraham's known sons, or of some son whose name has not come down. I am inclined to believe they were children of his son, Abraham, and in Part II have placed them under Abraham (20).

Abraham's children were at least nine in number, and there were probably more. The dates of their birth are in some cases uncertain. These children were:

1. Anne, probably born in 1734; living in 1794; but I am without further particulars.

2. Mary, born 1735; married Abraham Voorhees. They removed early to Reading, O., and left a large number of descendants.

3. Nelly, born probably about 1738. She married Abraham Probasco, of Monmouth County, and had five children, who have not been traced.

4. Catherine, born probably about 1740; living in 1794; but I cannot discover whom she married, if anyone.

5. Abraham, born 1743; died 1813. He married Mary Covert, and removed in 1806 to Ovid, N. Y., having previously resided at Middlebush, on the homestead of his father. He was a Captain in the Revolution, and among his children was Abraham, of Ovid, N. Y., who married Jane Van Nest, and was the grandfather of Rev. DeWitt Talmage Van Doren, of Norwalk, Conn.

6. Jacob, born 1745. Probably his first wife was Jane Voorhees, and his second wife Ann Nicholas, who died in 1854 in her 104th year. He resided at Sand Beach, Owasco County, N. Y., but most of his children have been untraceable. He had one son, Tunis, who was grandfather to Wallace Van Doorn, builder, of 229 W. 36th street, N. Y. City, and Edwin H. Van Doorn, printer, of 449 West Broadway, N. Y. City. Two of the sons of Tunis changed the name back to "Van Doorn," which adheres to some of their descendants.

7. Phebe, born 1747; died 1792. She married John Smith, of near South Branch, and left some descendants.

8. Emmetje, born 1749, who probably died young.

9. Isaac, born 1752, who probably served in the Revolution, but died before 1794, because not mentioned in his father's will. No further trace of him.

NINTH CHILD, PETER VAN DORN.

Peter was bap. at Marlborough in 1711, but was drowned when a young man at Shoal Harbor. He must have been named for Jacob's father Pieter; was bap. "Petrus."

TENTH CHILD, ISAAC VAN DORN.

Isaac was born at Pleasant Valley, in 1714, and lived on part of his father's homestead. He never married. He was a tanner and shoemaker, and afterwards storekeeper, and is said to have become very wealthy.

PART II.

LINE OF JACOB VAN DOORN, OF MONMOUTH COUNTY, NEW JERSEY.

PREFATORY NOTE.

This line is known as "The Line of Jacob van Doorn," because by this name it has always been known in the family, none of his descendants having, until recent years, connected him with Pieter van Doorn, of Gravezande, Holland, and of Long Island. This having been, therefore, a designation long in use, is continued. Another reason for it is that what is known concerning Jacob's father, Pieter, is exceedingly trifling and unsatisfactory.

The alphabetical arrangement of names is adopted for convenience of reference, and has many obvious advantages over the customary method of compiling genealogies.

In order to trace forward, or backward, the line of any person here named, the process is easy. If backward, the name of the father will be found followed by a number, which name and number will indicate where the particulars of him are to be found; and, on finding him, the name of his father will be found; and so any line can be traced to the beginning. If forward, the names of the children, also followed by numbers, will indicate the position of the facts concerning those children, and so on.

Because of the duplication of first names, the most ready method of finding any "Van Dorn" or "Van Doren" is to look for a different surname in the same family in the Index.

It should be noted that the use of the word "living" or its omission, in connection with any person named, is relative and indecisive; relative because such person may have deceased since the report concerning him or her came to the author; and indecisive, because correct information on that point has frequently been unobtainable. In the case of persons who, if living, would be a century old or more, if there is no information of date of death, the fact "deceased" is not printed, as that the reader will assume.

To find names in this genealogy other than that of Van Doren, Van Dorn, etc., the Index at the end of the volume should be consulted.

LINE OF JACOB VAN DOORN, OF MONMOUTH CO., N. J.

Alphabetically Arranged.

A

1. AARON VAN DOREN, of Amwell, Hunterdon Co., N. J., s. of Christian (447), b., at Middlebush, Aug. 8, 1730; d. Dec., 1792; m. (about) 1765, Margaret Stillwell. He probably located in Amwell at the time of his marriage, perhaps in conjunction with his brother Christian (448), who got a lease of a farm there in that year. He was in later life a merchant near Ringoes. His will, dated June 29, 1783, probated Dec. 27, 1792, (Hunterdon Co. Wills, Book 34, p. 235), names, as children living at the time he executed it, Altje, John, Christopher and Ann. His executors are his brothers, Abraham and Joseph, and also his wife, Margaret. He signed his name to his will, "Aaron Vandoren."

Children:

Alche (117), b. 1766; d. 1849.
John (1271), b. 1769; d. 1810.
Christopher (456), b. 1771; d. 1848.
Ann (184), b. 1773; d. 1864.
Aaron (3), b. (about) 1775; d. young.
Margaret (1581), b. 1777; d. 1781.

2. AARON VAN DORN, of Peapack, N. J., s. of Jacob (1128), b., near Hillsdale, N. J., Sept. 14, 1744; d. July 14, 1830; m. (1), May 9, 1765, Ghacy (or Gesha) Schenck (dau. of Jan Schenck and Jacomintje Couwenhoven), who was b. Sept. 14, 1748, and d. Feb. 3, 1820; and (2) Margaret Hurd, wid. of Major Hurd of Brooklyn, N. J. This Aaron appears to have been at Millstone in 1766, when he petitioned with others for a church at that place, and the same year he settled at Peapack, becoming there a farmer and miller. A deed of Dec. 23, 1766, shows that he then purchased of his brother John (1268), who had preceded him at Peapack, 175 acres of land. In 1769 he purchased 178 acres of his brother John, and on the latter he built a house west of the house erected by the late Lewis Van Dorn (1488), who was his grandson. He ran for a time a saw mill, and then built in 1808 a flour mill, which has always been known as Van Dorn's Mill. He sold thirty-five acres of this land to his son, William A., in 1822, and the most of it fell into the hands of William A. at or prior to Aaron's death. William A. sold the homestead part in 1840 to Jacob W. Dellicker, who afterward sold it to Peter Apgar.

About the year 1795 he made a journey on horseback to Ohio, and located a thousand acres of land on the site of present Cincinnati. He bought it of Judge John Cloves Symmes (afterward father-in-law of General William Henry Harrison), whose biography tells much in connection with the founding of Cincinnati. It seems that Judge Symmes could not himself secure the title to all the lands he had, yet he retained enough for Aaron to effect a location on the Cincinnati portion and then to return home. What occurred as to the disposition of the lands for a trifle is told elsewhere under Jacob (1136), the eldest son of Aaron, who undertook to cultivate it, and later sold it. Now the land is worth millions.

An Aaron Van Dorn, who was probably the same, together with a Jacob Van Dorn (who may have been the son of Aaron's brother, John), repaired the courthouse at Somerville, in 1800, receiving therefor the sum of £40.10d.; Jacob received £5.8s.

In 1783 Aaron and others petitioned the Legislature for a charter for the Presbyterian church at Lamington. He, however, later (in 1788), became a deacon of the Reformed Dutch church at Bedminster, and when that organization was incorporated in 1791 he became an elder, and was re-elected to the eldership in 1795, 1800, 1804, 1810, 1815, 1819, and 1821.

The farms of Aaron and his brother John were contiguous and are said now to be divided up into nine farms. Mrs. Margaret Vander-veer, of Fair Haven, N. J., once wrote me: "I remember seeing my grandfather's brother, Aaron, and his second wife at my grandfather's. Aaron was tall and slim. I was then (1821) a little girl of seven years old. Aaron and his first wife are buried in the Bedminster church-yard. There were no children by his second wife."

Gilbert (909), the fifth son of Aaron, went to Ohio to take charge of a part of land, and permanently located at Sunbury, Delaware Co.

The following receipt from Aaron in 1785 to the executors of his father's estate has some interest:

"Received of Isaac & Peter Vandorn A Nigro Garl in part of a Leagosey Due From the Estate of His Father The Sum of Forty five pounds York money.

"Received By me this 26th of January 1785.

"AARON VAN DORN."

His signature to this receipt was as follows:

Aaron's will, dated Oct. 16, 1826, and probated July 27, 1830 (Somerset Co. Wills, Book D, p. 82), bequeathed: (1) To his son Aaron all debts due from son William, except one-half of certain debt which William is to retain; also debts from other persons; also silver watch. (2) To his son William pleasure carriage, sleigh and mare "Lady Lightfoot;" also one-half property struck off to him "at sale of my personal property by the Sheriff of the County of Somerset." (3) Discharges son Isaac from moneys advanced. (4) To daughter Ann all debts due "me from her late husband William Irvine." (5) To grandchildren, Aaron and John Lane, "sons of my daughter Sarah, now deceased," a tract in Ohio of which they were in possession, containing 30 acres, being part of Miami purchase in Hamilton Co., 28th Section and first entire tract. (6) Nothing to Jacob, Peter and Gilbert: much being advanced to them. (7) To wife Margaret, bed and bedding. (8) Personal property in Isaac's possession to his children. (9) His slaves, Pine (male) and Rose (female), given their freedom, with clothing, beds and bedding. (10) Wearing apparel divided between Isaac and Aaron. (11) Rest of property to son Aaron. (12) To granddaughter, Geshea (daughter of Isaac), bed and bedding and silver teaspoons. The executors were Nicholas Arrowsmith, Jr., and William Thomson.

Aaron had twelve children, one of whom, Judge Peter A. Van Dorn, located in Mississippi, and was the father of the famous Confederate general, Earl Van Dorn.

From a letter of Feb. 17, 1845 (place not stated) to his uncle, William Van Dorn, of Freehold, it appears that he was in Cincinnati in the spring of 1844. He stated that he expected to marry "the twelfth of next month," and also says: "I have rented a house in town for her and furnished it so as to render her comfortable. . . . She lives .

19. ABRAHAM VAN DOREN, of Griggstown, N. J., s. of Christian (447), b., at Middlebush, N. J., Dec. 30, 1738; d., at Griggstown, Dec. 29, 1805; m., 1768 (license dated May 13), Anne Van Dyke (dau. of Francis Van Dyke of Amwell, N. J.), who was b. Nov. 28, 1741, and d. Feb. 29, 1820. He was a farmer and miller, and a portion of his farm is still in the possession of his great-grandchildren, Helen and Catharine Van Doren, of Griggstown. The mill he owned was previously owned (in 1752) by Nicholas Veghte. In 1831 it was pulled down to make way for the Delaware and Raritan canal. During the Revolutionary War, on the day after the Battle of Princeton, General Washington and his staff stopped at Abraham's house for rest and refreshments. The particulars of that eventful day, and of subsequent days as connected with Revolutionary history, are intensely interesting, and are given in Part V., Appendix IV.

Of Anne Van Dyke, his wife, his descendants have had many traditions. Her granddaughter, Mrs. Elizabeth S. Honeyman, mother of the writer, once said (about 1874) concerning her: "My grandmother was very strict; thought children should not be mirthful. I never liked her; she was forever scolding me and was cross to me. She lived next to the present Abram Van Doren's. Her husband had a store by his house and a mill on the other side of the road. Anne often attended store." Another person, who knew her, said: "Anne Van Dyke was very religious and careful. When Sunday-schools began to exist, she, with Miss Cruzer, teacher of the Griggstown day-school, opened a Sunday-school in a wagon-maker's shop. She was rather tall and of a very positive character." In an obituary notice of her at the time of her death this was said: "She was a large, tall, spirited woman; very decided; was a warm-hearted Christian; she regulated everything like clock-work; had good common sense." The father of Anne signed his name to a consent to Abraham's marriage to Anne (attached to the marriage license bond on file in Trenton) as "Francis Van Dicke."

Abraham was a deacon of the Millstone Reformed Church in 1785 and 1790, and an elder in 1794. His will dated Dec. 17, 1805 and probated Jan. 9, 1806 (Somerset Co. Wills, Book A, p. 82), bequeathed: (1) To wife Ann house and plantation, household and kitchen furniture, and "all my negro slaves, stock and farming utensils," during her life or while widow. (2) To same interest of $1,000, "and in case my said wife should marry again in addition to the interest of one thousand dollars above bequeathed to her, I give and bequeath unto her, my said wife, one bed and bedding and household furniture sufficient to furnish one room, but no part of my silver plate to be included therein." (3) Out of moneys placed out at interest £100 per annum to be paid to daughter Sophia, wife of Fred Stryker, and daughter Maria, wife of Peter Nevius, and to daughter Sarah until they have received respectively in addition to what they had received one-half part of what he had heretofore given to his sons. (4) To grandchildren, children of daughter Anne Van Derveer, viz: to Sarah, Abraham, Ann, Schenck, Peter and Abby £100 per annum equally to be divided between them every year until together with what he had given his daughter Ann, they have received a sum equal to the one-half of what he had given his sons respectively. (5) Balance of moneys to be placed out at interest divided among children and grandchildren as follows: Two-tenths to son Abraham; same to Isaac; same to Jacob; one-tenth to Sophia; same to Maria; same to daughter Sarah; and remaining one-tenth to living children of Anne Van Derveer. (6) After death or marriage of wife the homestead, stock, etc., to be sold and distributed as follows: £500 to Isaac and residue to children in proportion so that sons receive two shares to daughters' one. The executors were Jacob Van Doren (son), and Fred Stryker.

Abraham signed his name as follows:

20. ABRAHAM VAN DOREN, of Ovid N. Y., s. of Abraham (18), b., at Middlebush, N. J., Jan. 30, 1743; d., at Ovid, Jan. 21, 1813; m. (1) (sup.) Neeltje ———; (2) Apr. 16, 1788, Mary Covert (dau. of Abraham Covert), who was b. Oct. 15, 1767, and d. Apr. 22, 1849. Abraham was known as Captain Van Doren, having served as sergeant, lieutenant and captain in the Revolutionary War. His military record is as follows:

"Sergeant Captain Coonrad Ten Eyck's Company, Second Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia; commissioned Lieutenant, Captain Cornelius Lott's Company, Second Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia, January 1777, and served four monthly tours." "Commissioned Lieutenant, Captain William Logan's Company, First Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia, March, 1779, and served one month; Lieutenant, Captain Simon Duryea's Company, First Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia, June 1781, and served one month." "Captain, Somerset County New Jersey Militia, no date given, and served, two months."

In his younger years he signed his name "Abrm. Van Doren Jun." He was at one time a merchant of Rocky Hill, senior member of the firm of Van Doren & Grandine. A receipt given by him for wheat dated Sept. 25, 1770, and another for molasses, rum, etc., dated Jan. 11, 1773, are in the author's possession, his signature being as follows:

Abraham Van Dorn

On the day of "the great eclipse of the sun," June 16, 1806, he started with his family, consisting of his wife, five daughters and two sons, Jacob and Abraham, for the "Lake country," as the central part of New York state was called. They took their household goods in two wagons by way of Paterson, Cherry Valley, Schenectady, Skaneateles, Hardenbrook's Corners (now Auburn), to the foot of Owasco Lake, where Jacob, his brother, lived, accomplishing the journey in eleven days. Shortly afterward they went to Ovid, by way of Cayuga Bridge, arriving there July 4, while the first celebration of that anniversary in the then infant village of Ovid was being held, and where the frame of the first court house had just been raised. A few days later, Abraham, with his son Abraham, went to where the city of Rochester now stands, but there was then only one house existing at that place. They forded the river above the falls, and remained at Hansford Landing over night, three miles below, where there was a tavern. After proceeding some ten miles farther west, they were obliged to turn back for want of provisions, and returned to the town of Ovid, where Abraham, Sr., bought a farm on Lots 18 and 28, where he settled. The supposition as to Abraham's first marriage and the children thereby, may or may not be correct. (See remarks on page 82, ante).

After Abraham's death, his widow, late in life (in 1846) m. Abraham Low, of Seneca Co., N. Y. Abraham's grandson, Abraham Van Nest Van Doren (67), of Phoenix, Arizona, wrote in 1896 that he had his grandfather's Revolutionary musket, as well as the Bible of his great-grandfather, Sheriff Abraham Van Dorn (18).

21. ABRAHAM VAN DOREN, farmer, of near Whitehouse, N. J., s. of John (1267), b., at Millstone, N. J., Oct. 28, 1750; d. Apr. 17, 1823; m. (1), about 1772, Charity Bennet; (2), about 1775, Elizabeth Bowman, who was b. 1753, and d. Nov. 15, 1788; (3), about 1789, Catherine Nevius (dau. of Peter Nevyus and Maria Van Doren (1607), of near Clover Hill, N. J.), who was bap. July 4, 1756; and (4) Rachel Babcock, who was b. Sept. 10, 1756, and d. Oct. 27, 1824. Rachel Babcock joined the Whitehouse church by certificate from the Lamington church Aug. 20, 1808. Abraham himself joined the Whitehouse church by profession May 10, 1800. The large farm, situated between Whitehouse and Lamington, owned by Abraham, was purchased or obtained by inheritance of his father, who bought it Apr. 17, 1773, of the estate of Johannis Schenck of Readington, and it contained 432 acres. Probably Abraham moved upon it in 1773. As Abraham died without a will, the land was divided among his children, who sold off various portions from time to time. His son Peter N., of Pulteney, N. Y., sold 35 acres of it to his brother, Abraham A.; and the administrator of his son, John A., living in Ohio, sold by order of Orphan's Court in 1828, 192 acres to Abraham A. There were also other sales from Cornelius, of Genesee Co., N. Y., to his brother Joseph, in 1827, etc. In other words, Abraham's son, Abraham A., purchased most of the property, but afterward it went out of the family, except 82 acres, which fell into the possession of Joseph, who lived on it during his life. On Nov. 13, 1822, Abraham, as an elder of the Whitehouse church, and his son Jacob, who was deacon, purchased for the consistory of the church the land on which the church building had been begun in 1807, but was not finished until 1819.

Abraham is said to have had, like his grandfather, Christian (447), seventeen children, six of whom are said to have died in infancy, but I have been unable to verify the facts, or to obtain the names of more than nine to a certainty or at most ten. No records of the infants have been found, nor any family Bible to give fuller information.

Abraham is also said to have served in the Revolutionary War. If so, his record is that of the Abraham who is designated as "Private, Minute Men, Somerset County New Jersey Militia; Private, Captain William Jones' Company, Second Batt., Somerset County New Jersey Militia; stationed at Springfield, New Jersey, June 18 to 27, 1780, under Colonel John Taylor of Hunterdon County; at battle of Springfield, New Jersey, June 23, 1780." (As per records at Trenton).

Abraham died without a will, his then living children (so far as known) being John, Edmund, Cornelius, Peter, Joseph, Aletta, Jacob, Benjamin, and Abraham. In 1825 these children began to convey their allotments of their father's real estate chiefly to Abraham. Edmund signed his deeds by Abraham as attorney; John by a "William Van Doren" as attorney, and Peter N. by his mark. The lots averaged from 20 to 30 acres. (Hunterdon Co. Deeds, Book 44-47, etc.).

In 1800 he built the present house where two of his granddaughters now reside.

He shot a deer on Lot 19, in Ovid, in 1814, and a wild goose on the wing in the state of Illinois, in 1874, when in his eightieth year, both with the same musket which his father carried in the Revolutionary War. During his residence in Ovid he held various town offices, and in his old age resided with his daughter, Ann, and her husband, Lewis Bodine, on the same farm and near where he settled with his father in 1806.

He was an unusually excellent farmer, a pillar of the Griggstown Reformed Church, and a thoroughly conscientious, industrious and worthy man, greatly esteemed by all who knew him. his estimable wife exerted in his family. Two of his daughters still reside on the homestead.

He commenced the practice of medicine at Neshanic, where he married. About 1848 he removed to Ringoes where he acquired a large practice. He had a fine, scholarly face, was very gentle, of kindly manners, and possessed a soft voice, with an eye that was full of tenderness; just the sort of a man for a doctor. (1), Sept. 27, 1836, Catherine Brown (dau. of Sevirinus Brown and Mary Ten Eyck, of Carlisle), who was b. May 25, 1818, and d. May 23, 1849; and (2), Nov. 8, 1849, Lucy Maria Kinne (dau. of Jonathan Kinne and Lucy Holt), who was b. Apr. 6, 1815, and d. Jan. 22, 1899. Mr. Van Doren went to Chicago to reside in 1837. In 1893 I corresponded with him, and while he was nearly blind and quite feeble, he wrote many letters concerning his immediate ancestry and relatives. He had, indeed, traced out and obtained the dates of several hundred of the Van Dorens related to him, and he cheerfully put his MSS. into my hands. Without this information many dates in his immediate line now in this volume would have been missing. His labor of love had extended over many years, and he intended to print his MSS., but never finished it. His kindly face and warm heart were a benediction to his relatives and friends.

One of his descendants thus writes about him: "Abram B. Van Doren when a young man joined the western movement, going to Ohio where he lived for a time, and afterward to Illinois. At the time of his marriage to Catherine Brown he was a house-painting contractor and real estate dealer. After the death of his wife, during Chicago's most severe cholera epidemic, he took an active part in the relief work. Lucy M. Kinne was a young woman who had left her home in Richfield Springs, N. Y., to live in the West, and she also fearlessly devoted herself to this work. They met as 'Samaritans,' became friends, and were afterward married, removing to Ohio. Mr. Van Doren was a man of very positive, almost radical opinions. He was a devoutly religious man of the 'blue Presbyterian' type; a man of kindly inclinations, and one who was bound by nature to whatever he believed to be right and just. He was a pronounced Prohibitionist throughout his life. That he was a true lover of the beautiful was shown by his large collection of handsome jewelry, pictures and furniture. Before the Civil War, and during war-time, he was conductor of an 'underground railway,' and many an escaping slave has risen to 'call him blessed.' He did his duty as he saw it and not from any sentimental or partisan reasons, believing the institution of slavery a crime. His arguments were always quoted from the Bible first, but his diary, kept conscientiously from young manhood until his declining years, was filled with clippings from sermons by Henry Ward Beecher, extracts from Garrison's writings, Lincoln's speeches and writings of Harriet Beecher Stowe. After the War he returned to Chicago, where his home was near the lake in what was then a quiet residential section, but is now in the heart of the business centre. He bought and sold much real estate and continued his painting business. His interest in the questions of the day, though sometimes prejudiced, was always keen, and he read much and preserved many books and papers that are now of historic value. After his seventieth year his health gradually failed. He had lived in an age of progress in the material and spiritual world, and he had been a man who saw and realized every change. He clung to the best of the old customs and ideals, only adopting what need be of the new. Many lives were made happier because he lived. He was a devoted husband and father; a man of sterling worth."

July 26, 1811, and d. June 2, 1882. Mrs. Knox was a remarkable woman in many ways. Her parents were exceedingly bright and active Christian people, from whom she inherited an unusual piety and a spirit of warm-hearted benevolence. She was educated at the "Van Doren Institute," in Brooklyn, N. Y., kept by her uncle, Rev. Isaac Van Doren, and from her early years was a writer in both prose and poetry. When but thirteen years of age she composed religious verses that would have done credit to a mature mind. The following is an example written on Feb. 15, 1829:

"Hail glorious morn! Thou saw'st the Son of Heaven
 Rise from the dark recesses of the Tomb.
 Clothed in a robe of Majesty Divine,
 He burst the gates of death asunder; and
 With forms angelic—sons of heavenly light—
 Thou saw'st Him leave this earth, and rise to heaven,
 There, seated on His Father's throne, for those Who nailed Him on the cross He cries forgive:
 And, with assenting nod, all Heaven rings."

She began her married life at Nassau, N. Y., and followed her husband in his successive spheres of labor. Her last residence was at St. Thomas, W. I., where she resided with her husband for more than six years. She then returned to New Jersey, and died near Raritan. She was tall and thin of stature, with pale complexion, high and broad forehead. "The general aspect of her features was beautiful: attractive by their composed gravity and pleasantness; and most winning by their high intelligence and deep pure love which they ever exhibited. . . . The powers of her mind were of a high order, well cultivated and in beautiful proportion." A full account of her life appears in the work entitled, "Life and Character of Mrs. Aletta Knox," by her husband, published in 1854.

Dr. Knox graduated from Rutgers College in 1830, and from the New Brunswick Seminary in 1837. His pastorates were: in Reformed Dutch churches, as follows: Nassau, N. Y., 1838-'41; Utica, N. Y., 1841-'44; St. Thomas, W. I., 1847-'53. After he resigned at St. Thomas, he became pastor of the Presbyterian church at Newtown, L. I., from Mar. 28, 1855, until his death in 1882, being minister there for 27 years. He was a man of marked ability in several ways.

He owned for a long time the farm called the 'Indian Farm,' situate in Hillsboro Township, lying about a mile west of the Neshanic church. I was born on that farm. I always understood it was called the 'Indian Farm' because the title was held by an Indian up until a short time before my father obtained it. I think the farm is now owned by the Township of Hillsboro. My father then became a school-teacher and pursued that occupation to the time of his death. The father of Abraham J. Van Fleet was known as 'Old Collector,' he having been collector of Readington Township for many years. He resided in Readington Township on the old Yord road about two miles east of the present village of Three Bridges. In early life he was a blacksmith as was his father. Bar as an attorney, and in June, 1858, as counselor, practicing as such in Flemington, N. J., until May, 1875, when he was appointed Vice-Chancellor by Chancellor Theodore Runyon. He was reappointed in 1882, but in 1887 resigned. His resignation was accepted, but he was immediately reappointed by Chancellor McGill, who had succeeded Chancellor Runyon, this term expiring in May, 1894, when he was again reappointed, for the fourth time. He was also appointed Vice-Ordinary in the Prerogative Court in 1888, and held that office at the time of his death. In an obituary notice in the Newark "Daily Advertiser," it was said of him: "Vice-Chancellor Van Fleet was the most distinguished equity judge in the state. He was absolutely incorruptible and fearless in the discharge of his duties. His friendships were warm and sincere, and his death is an irreparable loss to the court, to the bar, and to the people of the state. He was generous, kind and hospitable, inheriting this trait from his Holland ancestors, who for many years before him lived in the counties of Somerset and Hunterdon." No ch.

Lewis Thompson was probably related, though perhaps remotely, to Rev. Thomas Thompson, Fellow of Christ's Church, Cambridge, England, who arrived at Freehold, N. J., Nov. 11, 1745, and took charge of St. Peter's (Episcopal) church at that place, also officiating for a time in Christ's church, Shrewsbury. He resigned at Shrewsbury 1748, but continued at Freehold until Nov., 1850, when he went to Africa as the pioneer of the English Mission Society. From an examination of the Freehold records I am of the opinion that Lewis was a grandson of Cornelius "Tomson" (as he signed his name), of Freehold, in whose will, proved Dec. 21, 1727, he names his wife, Mary; and children, John, Lewis, Thomas, Cornelius, Elizabeth (wife of Thomas Ellison), Eleanor, Rebecca and Ghertie. His son, Lewis, who signed himself "Lewis Thompson", was given the farm at Freehold. The will of this Lewis was proved Oct. 31, 1750, and is doubtless the one after whom Lewis, who m. Anne Van Dorn, and who may have been his nephew, was named. The Lewis who m. Anne Van Dorn had certainly a brother, Thomas Thompson, who served on committees of importance in the Episcopal Church at Freehold, and served as delegate to church conventions in 1795, 1810, 1814, and 1815; and d. Apr. 5, 1834, in his 86th year. This Thomas resided at Crosswicks, and was a man of considerable property as well as standing. Lewis also had a brother Cornelius (see infra), who went with Lewis to Nova Scotia.

Lewis Thompson was a Loyalist during the Revolutionary War, in consequence of which he became more or less involved in conflict with his own neighbors. The following interesting account of him during those stirring times is given by Hon. George C. Beekman, in his "Early Dutch Settlers of Monmouth Co.," p. 45:

"In courting and visiting his wife near Pleasant Valley, he had become familiar with all the roads and byways, and also with the customs and habits of the Dutch settlers there. Capt. John Schenck, the famous partisan leader, resided on an adjoining farm, now occupied by his grandson, David Schenck, and near the Van Dorn's. A reward of fifty guineas had been offered for his capture or death by the British. There were several midnight raids made by the Tories and British to capture him. Three different times these bands surrounded his house between midnight and daybreak, to capture him. He generally slept out in the woods, or, if in his house, he had scouts outlying who brought him instant word of the approaching enemy.

"On one of these occasions the Tories were guided or led by this Lewis Thompson, who had married among his near relatives and neighbors. Knowing the country, Thompson managed so well, that Captain Schenck barely escaped in his night clothes from a rear window and concealed himself by laying down in a wheat field behind his house. It was in June, and the wheat stalks were high enough to hide a man laying down, but so near was he that he could plainly hear them talk and their threats to his wife, and recognized this Lewis Thompson. When the war ended, Lewis Thompson with his wife removed to Nova Scotia. After remaining there many years and learning that the old bitterness and anger had died away, they came back to visit their relatives. While visiting his wife's people at Holmdel, he went one day into a country store kept by one of his wife's relatives. While there Captain John Schenck happened to enter. As soon as his eyes fell on Thompson he turned to the storekeeper, saying, 'Either that Tory rascal must go or else I will. The same roof can never cover us both, and if I go out I shall never step foot on your premises again if I live a hundred years.' "

At the close of the War a large number of New Jersey Tories felt obliged to leave the country, Lewis and Cornelius Thompson among them. They went to the St. Johns river, in what was then Nova Scotia, but is now the province of New Brunswick, and took up land assigned to them by the British government. Just when they returned from there is not known, but in 1786 Lewis wrote the following letter to his wife's brother Isaac Van Dorn (1076), concerning his wife's legacy, presumably due from the estate of Anne's father, Jacob, who d. in 1779. This letter was recently in the author's possession, and is of considerable interest:

"St. John's River, Nova Scotia,
"July 10th, 1786.

"DEAR SIR: My Brother Cornelius goes to New Jersey on business and I have requested him to wait upon you and settle (if possible) the whole or part of Anne's legacy. Cash will suit me best; as I am just settling in this new woody country you must be convinced of the great propriety of my making this request. Flour will be a good article if you can ship a small quantity with him when he returns. Be so good as not to disappoint me, as I am now in more want of your assistance than probably I shall ever be again. Quite satisfied and contented with the Country; everything I have attempted to raise answers my expectation. I wish to refer you to my brother for particulars, or any information you may want respecting us or our situation, as he is well acquainted with every circumstance.

"Accept of our affectionate respects and cordial wishes for your welfare. A thousand compliments to all friends. Please to write to me.

"I am dear Sir yours Sincerely,

"L. THOMPSON"

It is quite certain that Lewis returned from Nova Scotia before 1802, and located near Freehold, on the farm lately owned by Andrew Perrine, where he died. If so, Lewis and his wife resided in Nova Scotia about twenty years. According to family tradition, they lived during the Revolution in a stone house seven miles west of Freehold, which, before the Battle of Monmouth, was the headquarters of the British General, Henry Clinton. There is said to be a Thompson graveyard at the place now called Elton, but I have obtained no records from it.

It is said of Anne Van Dorn that she was "a very bright, interesting old lady, full of talk and energy." In her later years she lived and died at Somerville, N. J., with her son, Colonel William Thompson. Mr. Thompson's signature was as follows:

J., to Somerville in 1823, studied law with Hon. Peter D. Vroom, and was admitted to the N. J. bar in 1824. "He was a genial, kind-hearted man, possessed strong common sense, was a fair talker, and quite successful as a jury lawyer." Jacob V. Kearney, of Shepherdstown, West Va.; deceased.

Jane Kearney, of Dubuque, Ia., m. (1) Francis Kelley O'Ferrall; and (2) a "Senator Davis." A relative sends in this interesting anecdote concerning Jane's marriage to Mr. O'Ferrall: "When he pressed his suit for marriage she refused his offer. Several days afterward some one was grinding an axe on an old grindstone, and, for the want of oil, the stone squeaked at every turn. Jane began crying, and, asked the reason, replied the old grindstone said: 'Kelley, Kelley, come back! Kelley, Kelley, come back!' Kelley did come back; they were married and went to Dubuque, Iowa. Mr. O'Ferrall died, leaving her poor. He had owned land nearby, but sold it, and she had never signed the deeds. This land became valuable in the West. A lawyer by the name of Davis discovered she was entitled to her third, sued for it, gained the suit, and it made her rich. He afterward married her and became a United States Senator. I think his name was Davis. I do not remember hearing of any children." I have not been able to secure particulars of this "Senator Davis," nor of children, if any.

448. CHRISTIAN VAN DOREN, s. of Christian (447), b., at Middlebush, N. J., May 15, 1734; d. 1783; m. (1) about 1765, Alche Van Bryck; and (2), after 1777, Maria Nevius (dau. of Marten Nevius and Willemptje L. Van Voorhees), who d. (after) 1796. Christian was a farmer, who was located at different places, viz.: at Amwell, Hunterdon Co., and at Pluckamin, Neshanic and Harlingen, Somerset Co., N. J. On the records his name is sometimes given as "Christianus" and "Christopher," but his signature was as follows:

He seems to have located in Amwell twp. prior to 1765. His brother, Aaron (1), located there about that time. A paper which was in the possession of the late Jacob Wyckoff, of Middlebush, contains a lease from the administrators of Jeremiah Lambert, of Amwell, for 200 acres of land for the term of two years from Mar. 1, 1765. He then signed his name "Christiaun Van doren." In 1774 he joined the Reformed Dutch ch. at Neshanic, N. J. He is probably the same Christian whose Revolutionary record is given as follows:

"Private, Captain Jacob Ten Eyck's Company, First Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia; on march in Pennsylvania, September 24 to October 10, 1777; (possibly at battle of Germantown, Pennsylvania, October 4, 1777); Private, Somerset County New Jersey Militia, (no company given), June 8 to 14, 1780, at alarm at Springfield, New Jersey, under Colonel Frederick Frelinghuysen; at battle of Springfield, June 23, 1780. Private, Captain William Jones' Company, Second Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia; stationed at Springfield, New Jersey, June 18 to 27, 1780, under Colonel John Taylor."

His will, dated Sept. 26, 1782 and proved Mar. 25, 1783, (Hunter-Co. Wills, Book 25, p. 153), provided: (1) His wife Mary to have possession of his estate until his son Bernardus comes to full age; then to be sold and £200 given her, "being so much money as she had when I married her;" together with all the household furniture she had when he married her. (2) As to money from sale, etc., his three sons, Christian, Bernardus and John, and widow Mary, each to receive two shares, and the remainder to be divided, share and share alike, between his two daughters, Jenny and Holchey. (3) "It is my will that my children be put out to trades, viz.: Christian, Holchey and Bernard." (4) Mother to help John till he comes of age. The executors were his brothers, Peter and Joseph Van Dorn, and his wife; and the witnesses were Jacobus Nevius, Roleff Schenck, and John Davis.

Mar. 16, 1847. Christian lived near Lamington, N. J., for a time. He served in the Revolutionary War from 1776 to the end of the war, when he removed to Montgomery Co., N. Y. His Revolutionary record is as follows:

"Served sundry tours from Spring of 1776 to end of the war, in companies commanded by Captains Jacob Ten Eyck, First Battalion, Somerset County, Coonrad Ten Eyck, Second Battalion, Somerset County, Philip Fulkerson, Second Battalion, Somerset County, William Logan, First Battalion, Somerset County, and Nathaniel Porter, First Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia."

On Feb. 25, 1792, Christian and his wife, Nuel, then of the state of New York, gave a release to his brother "Brogan" Van Doren, of Somerset co., N. J., of his interest in the real estate of his father, William, consisting of 171 acres of land near Pluckamin, N. J. He there signed his name as follows:

Mar. 13, 1828; m., Oct. 19, 1780, Johanna Hoagland (dau. of Abraham Hoagland and Johanna Stoothoof, of Nine-Mile-Run, Somerset co., N. J.), who was b. Dec. 26, 1759, and d. Feb. 22, 1821. Christianus obtained possession, about 1785, of the farm known as

"Dobie's Plantation," which was purchased by John Dobie, Oct. 9, 1680, of the Indians, and contained 345 acres. Between 1801 and 1805 Christianus purchased other tracts of land, viz.: 10 acres on Neshanic mountain and 19 acres in Bridgewater twsp. He was considered a wealthy man in his day, having personal estate at his death amounting to $12,000. When Christianus died the Dobie Plantation descended to his sons, John C. and Abraham C., the former owning 100 and the latter 245 acres of the same. It is stated that the tombstone of Christianus on his farm states that he died "in his 72nd year," which does not agree with the birth-date above given. He served in the Revolutionary War, his record being as follows:

517. DANIEL POLHEMUS VAN DORN, farmer, of Marlborough, and Freehold, N. J., s. of William (2199), b., Oct. 7, 1820; d. Nov. 24, 1898; m., Sept. 9, 1874, Anna Julia Roche, school teacher, of North Hadley, Mass. (dau. of John Roche and Louisa Billings, of Boston, Mass.), who was b. Apr. 4, 1842, and is living. Mr. Van Dorn was educated at Matawan, N. J., and afterward went to school at Lenox, Mass. On finishing his studies he returned to the homestead and engaged in farming. Upon the death of his father he received a portion of the homestead farm, and later he purchased the rest. He continued to live there for many years, but in his later life took up his residence in Freehold. As an agriculturalist he was unusually successful. He was a member of the Monmouth County Agricultural Society and took an interest in all matters which were for the benefit of the public. He was active in securing the branch of railroad between Freehold and Matawan, now merged into the New Jersey Central system. He was elected as a Democrat (to which party he always adhered), to the State Legislature in 1854; he served as a member of the Board of Freeholders, 1880 and 1881, and held township offices. In all his actions he was noted for his firmness and integrity. In an obituary notice of him it was said:

"Daniel P. Van Dorn was one of those true men and gentlemen who command the respect of everybody. In appearance he was a fine type—tall, broad-shouldered, strong and noble-looking. His courtly manner, a remnant of chivalry not often encountered in the present age, well fitted his handsome appearance, and with it went character and intelligence which elicited for him the highest admiration and esteem. This courtly demeanor was ever with him, at home or abroad. No circumstances ever seemed to startle him into any other bearing. In his family it was present with every act, and kind politeness was one of his notable characteristics. He was thoroughly upright, liberal in his opinions and generous with his means. He was highly honored in this county, where he spent his whole life, and was known extensively as a public-spirited man and a good citizen."

My own personal knowledge of Mr. Van Dorn led me to value his acquaintance beyond words. He was singularly interested in the Van Dorn family, as he well knew his ancestors, both immediate and remote, was of choice mould. He descended from a long line of splendid men in physique and character, who were pillars in the Reformed Church at Marlborough, and were successful in their occupations. He knew more of his relatives than did any one of them. During his later life he was of great assistance to the author as to the Monmouth Co. families.

569. EARL VAN DORN, General C. S. Army, s. of Peter A. (1889), b., at Port Gibson, Miss., Sept. 17, 1820; d., at Springhill, Tenn., May 7, 1863; m., 1840, Caroline Godbold, who d. Jan. 19, 1877. Miss Godbold, when a North Carolina girl, went to Alabama, and met Earl, who was a lieutenant, stationed at the Mt. Vernon Arsenal. He was 20 years of age and she 16 when they married. His subsequent history is national.

Earl Van Dorn became the famous Confederate General of Mississippi, a memoir of whose life was printed in 1902, under the title of "A Soldier's Honor." This publication, which was made under the supervision of his only surviving sister, Mrs. Emily V. D. Miller (729) of Washington, D. C., is an intensely interesting sketch of one of the most gallant leaders of the Confederacy, who fell by the hand of an assassin in the Civil War, but not too early for his name to be inscribed high on the roll of fame. To this book we refer for exhaustive particulars of General Van Dorn's military record. Briefly stated, his war record was as follows:

He graduated from the West Point Military Academy and was appointed Brevet 2nd Lieutenant, 7th Infantry, July 1, 1842; 2nd Lieutenant, 7th Infantry, Nov. 30, 1844; 1st Lieutenant, 7th Infantry, Mar. 3, 1847. He was in the Mexican War at the battle of Monterey, siege of Vera Cruz, battles of Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Cherubusco, and at the capture of the City of Mexico, when (Sept. 13, 1847), he was severely wounded. He was subsequently with his regiment in Louisiana, Florida, and Texas. In 1859 he was in service against the Indians, and again severely wounded. He resigned, Jan. 3, 1861. In the Mexican War he was commended for conspicuous merit by General Scott. At the close of that war the Legislature of Mississippi, and citizens of Port Gibson, presented him with costly swords in honor of his achievements. The citizens of Port Gibson also presented him with a handsome silver service in recognition of his gallantry in Texas against the Indians. During the Civil War he was also again presented by the state of Mississippi with a sword for his "noble defense of Vicksburg."

In Reuben Davis' "Recollections of Mississippi and Mississippians" (1889), it is said: "When Mississippi seceded in January, 1861, Colonel Reynolds raised a company for the War, which received the name of Vandorns. The 'Vandorns' formed part of the second Mississippi Regiment. It was sent to Virginia, and was engaged in many battles—always in the front when the call came for duty." That state elected Earl Van Dorn a Major-General of the state troops. He was then forty years of age. As soon as there was a regular army of the Confederates he asked to be assigned for rank in that army, and was appointed a Colonel. He began his duties Apr. 15, 1861, and from that time until his death he was one of the most energetic and brave and most feared of the Confederate officers. A prize of $5,000 was placed upon his head by some northern newspapers. His first expedition was to Texas, where he captured some Federal steamers. In September, 1861, he was ordered to report to Richmond for the purpose of organizing a cavalry troop to operate in Virginia, and was then promoted to the rank of Major-General. In Jan., 1862, he was ordered to go to the assistance of General Price, and was given command of Missouri, Arkansas, Indian Territory and Louisiana as far south as Red River, and was in various engagements with General Price. In April, 1862, the combined armies of Van Dorn and Price, consisting of 25,000 men, were ordered to join General Beauregard at Corinth, Miss., with a view to driving the Federal army out of Tennessee and Kentucky. General Van Dorn made several sorties from Corinth, inflicting great destruction of railroads and bridges. When General Grant compelled General Beauregard to evacuate Corinth, General Van Dorn was assigned (June, 1862) to the defense of Vicksburg, and had his headquarters at Jackson, Miss. His defense of Vicksburg was a masterly one, as history shows.

It becoming evident that General Van Dorn was peculiarly adapted to command cavalry, he was sent to join General Jackson at Granada, and was in the campaign at Holly Springs. About this time charges were preferred against him by Brigadier-General Bowen, relative to his supposed failure of operations at Corinth, whereupon General Van Dorn promptly asked for a court of inquiry, which convened at Abbeyville, Miss., in Nov., 1862, and which, after a thorough examination of all the charges, declared unanimously that they were not only not proved, but wholly disproved.

In the Spring of 1863 he was made chief cavalry commander of Bragg's army at Springhill, Tenn., where he met his death at the hand of a foul assassin. On May 7, 1863, as he sat in his room at his desk at headquarters, a certain Major Kimmel came in and asked the favor of a passport to go through the Confederate lines to Nashville. General Van Dorn wrote the passport, but, before his full signature was signed, the man passed to a position behind him, fired a bullet in the back of General Van Dorn's head, instantly killing him, walked out, mounted his horse, fled across the fields, and with his passport reached the Federal lines. The assassin remained under Federal protection until the close of the War, and afterward died a natural death.

The result of such a catastrophe was great sorrow throughout the South. It led to the General's daughter taking the black veil for life. Brigadier-General W. H. Jackson, in announcing the sad event, stated that "his career was resplendent with the most glorious victories;" that he was "self-sustaining, self-reliant, and bared his breast to every shock with that true genuine nobleness and courage which he so eminently possessed." "Probably," continued the announcement, "more interest has gathered around him than any other general officer on this Continent. . . . No knight of the olden time ever advanced to the contest more eagerly, and, after the fury of the conflict had passed away, none was ever more generous and humane to the sufferers than he." Said another writer: "He was the most brilliant, high-toned man that this state (Mississippi) ever gave birth to; he reflected lustre on her escutcheon."

As the General could not be buried at his home in Port Gibson, his remains were interred at Calvert, Ala., where they rested until 1899, when they were re-interred in the cemetery at Port Gibson, on which spot there was erected, in October, 1907, a handsome marble monument to him and to the Confederate soldiers of the town and county. It was executed in Italy, and set up by the Daughters of the Confederacy.

Earl Van Dorn's cousin, Lewis (1488), of Peapack, N. J., stated to the author that he once went to West Point with Earl, and would himself have entered that institution, but his (Lewis') father would not allow him to do so; and that General Scott once said in his presence: "Few officers could fill Earl's place."

The General was a handsome man, much more so than the indifferent picture of him presented in this volume would indicate. He is thus described by one who knew him well: "Tall, erect, handsome, with light chestnut hair, bright flashing eyes, cameo-like features, and a graceful, well-proportioned form, he had that winning charm of manner and personal magnetism so potent in love and friendship. An omnivorous reader, familiar with classical and modern literature, an inimitable raconteur, with an inexhaustible fund of apropos quotations, he was a delightful fireside and table companion, as welcome in the politest society as in camps and bivouac. During a long, active, eventful career, he never lost a friend or justly made an enemy."

We regret not to have space for extracts from letters written by General Van Dorn to his friends, and especially to his wife, during his long career as an officer. These letters show the man more truly than any historical account of his life. One sample from a letter written to his wife in 1856 illustrates his warm and exuberant nature. "To hear from you and my dear children so often when I am so far off from you makes me feel that, though cut off from the world by seas, mountains and plains, I am not alone—there is a spirit of love with me coming over them all with the breeze; there are hearts beyond that beat for me and send love, as flowers send their fragrance even here. . . . As for your love and affectionate meaning to me—so constant, so unabating and gentle—what could match it? . . . The prairies around us are fragrant with beautiful wild flowers; some of which I recognize as old friends of the pretending gorgeous gardens,—verbena, wild-pink, lilac, heart-ease, camomile, daisy, etc. Wolves run through the camp in numbers every night, howling like fiends of the lower world. Springs gush up from unadorned rocks in this region and disappear almost as soon as seen, seeking underground passage to the ocean; long, forked-tailed birds fly about in the stunted groves of trees that do not know how to worship God by singing; Indians, wolves, serpents, scorpions, and such unaccountable works of Nature have made this region their abiding place; and strange to say, here in places Nature smiles—here beautiful flowers fling their sweetness on the morning breeze and seem as gay, yes gayer, than when they rise and fall on the bosom of the city belle."

622. ELEANOR VAN DOREN, of Freehold, N. J., dau. (sup.) of Abraham (18), b. (perhaps about) 1738 or 1733; m., 1761, Abraham Probasco, of Shrewsbury. The marriage license, at Trenton, N. J., dated Nov. 9, 1761, states she was of "Monmouth." Her father certainly resided at Middlebush after 1723, but previously was at Hillsdale, near Freehold. She was living in 1794. Eleanor was probably named after the first wife of Abraham, and also possibly was Abraham's first child; if so, she may have been born in 1733, and perhaps her birth was the cause of the early death of her mother. Her marriage bond to Abraham Probasco was signed by David Forman.

623. ELEANOR VAN DORN, dau. of Aure (264), b., near Hillsdale, N. J., Apr. 3, 1742; d. Feb. 11, 1834, in her 92nd year; m. (1) Hendrick Smock, of Freehold, m. license dated May 26, 1761; and (2) Garret Hendrickson. She was bap., at Marlborough, N. J., as "Nealtje." There were no children by second marriage.

Garret Hendrickson was a lieutenant in Capt. Wm. Schenck's Militia during the Revolutionary War, and received a pension for wounds of June 21, 1780, when it is said he had his arm broken. Garret owned one of the best farms in Monmouth co., and an interesting account of a raid on his house in which the raiders took Mrs. Hendrickson's silk dress to wrap up hams is given in Beekman's "Early Dutch Settlers of Monmouth," p. 122. The Garret Hendrickson house is still standing on the Pleasant Valley farm. Eleanor and Hendrick Smock and their daughter Catherine were buried in the Schenck-Couwenhoven cemetery in Pleasant Valley, but were afterwards re-interred in the new Holmdel cemetery.

ward (dau. of Samuel Woodward and Phebe Southard, of Basking Ridge), who was b. Feb. 14, 1812, and d. April, 1878. Mr. Van Dorn was a remarkable man as to mental and physical activities. He erected the Van Dorn mill at Basking Ridge, drawing the plans himself, and making many improvements to the machinery. The architecture of the mill was unusual, and has always attracted the attention of passers-by. Many years of his life were spent in an attempt to perfect a "cotton harvester" machine for the picking of cotton, as he considered the picking by hand too slow a process. His patent (U. S. Patents, No. 194,854, dated Sept. 4, 1877) was thus described by himself: "The object of the invention is to furnish a machine for removing the cotton from the ripe bolls without injuring the unripe bolls or the plants, and deliver the fibre clean and free from leaves and other impurities ready for ginning." The machine weighed 200 pounds, and was intended to be drawn by one or two pairs of horses or mules. Mr. Van Dorn was also the inventor and constructor of a mill-train for levelling mill stones, which is used everywhere; an improvement on turbine water wheels; and also a dredge for his own mill-pond, which was afterward used on the Delaware and Raritan canal.

He always made his birthday a holiday for his family, when his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren assembled in his home. The last celebration was in 1902, on his 95th birthday. His mind was then as active as when he was in his prime, and he was still engaged in making plans for his work for the coming season when he died. He always took an interest in public affairs, and in politics was a lifelong Democrat. At his death he had something like a hundred living descendants. His real estate is now owned by his son, William, and his grandson, S. S. Swain.

832. FRED VAN DORN, of Mt. Morris, N. Y., s. of John (1287), b. there July 2, 1864; d. there Sept. 2, 1907; unmarried. When seven years of age Mr. Van Dorn accompanied his parents to Towanda, Pa., where he attended high school, and also went to the Susquehanna Collegiate Institute. In 1881, he returned to Mt. Morris, and in 1885 entered the Genesee Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., where he spent three years. He then began to study law, but afterward decided to adopt journalism and make it his life-work. For many years he was a writer for various humorous publications, including "Puck" and "Life." He published for a time "Van Dorn's Magazine." In 1899 he started the "Picket Line Post," a weekly journal at Mt. Morris, and was its owner at the time of his death. About 1898, finding that the writer of this work on "The Van Doorn Family" did not have the time to finish it, he corresponded about it with Mr. Van Dorn, who offered to complete it. His well known historical bent and indefatigability were such that the writer committed his unfinished MSS. to him, but in 1906 he had found himself unable to do much toward completing the work, and the MSS. was then returned to the writer, who, unfortunately, never saw Mr. Van Dorn. The Rochester "Democrat and Chronicle" thus commented upon his death: "Few newspaper men whose activities are limited to the weekly newspaper field possessed the native talent of Fred Van Dorn. . . . He had a keen sense of humor and a gift of original expression that made the trivial episodes of rural life sparkle with fun." Said another writer: "He was a sterling and true man. The record of his private life is without blemish. Conscientiousness marked his observance of every obligation, whether great or small."

Jan. 1, 1793, and d. Jan. 31, 1874, at Middletown, on the homestead of Isaac Van Dorn, where Garret Van Dorn lived. Hon. George C. Beekman, in his "Early Dutch Settlers of Monmouth County," says: "Garret Van Dorn died childless and intestate. He was well known throughout Monmouth County, being gentle and placid in disposition, without an enemy in the world, and he was respected and liked by all who knew him. He left a large estate with no debts beyond funeral expenses and charges for his last sickness. Yet this estate has remained unsettled down to the present day. It is the Jarndyce v. Jarndyce case of Monmouth Co. It shows how an estate involved in no law suits and no debts can be dragged through the courts for years. A true history of this estate would be of great interest, not only to the relatives interested but to the public at large, so that we all might know 'how not to do it,' while making great pretensions of doing, settling and distributing. A more honest man never lived than Garret Van Dorn and no man ever left property freer from all claims and litigation than he. Yet the estate became entangled and has been left unsettled, although more than forty years have passed away since administration was granted to Williampe, his widow."

Williampe, his widow, left a will, dated Apr. 7, 1856, proved Jan. 31, 1874 (Monmouth Co. Wills, Book L., p. 28), leaving all her real and personal estate to her nephew, Azariah Conover. Both Garret Van Dorn and his wife are buried in the Christ Episcopal churchyard, at Middletown. No ch.

Gilbert went West early in life, and in 1845 he became postmaster at Trenton Works, in Delaware Co., Ohio. The following letter would indicate that he had been a long time in Ohio; so that it is highly probable all of his eight children, except the first, were born there, and had not seen New Jersey, until the events which he described. This letter is so interesting that it is printed in full. It is directed to William Van Dorn (2199), of Freehold, N. J., his cousin; and I append a copy of his autograph signature thereto:

"Trenton Works, Delaware Co., O., Fely 9, 1845.

"Dear Cousin:

"Your letter I was gratified to receive in a few days after its date; to be informed of your good health—your family, your mother and other relatives—was truly a satisfaction. And I again have the satisfaction of saying to you that myself and family all continue to enjoy good health. My calculations are [to] set out for N. J. next week with 14 or 15 horses; have made arrangements to put up at Peapack. Have also made arrangements to take with me two of my daughters, that they may have an opportunity of visiting their sister in Pa., my mother country; and also visiting and forming acquaintances with their relatives, which is an enjoyment that I can but seldom treat them to in this country.

"If your son and daughter should yet remain with you, be so good as to let them visit us at Peapack, where I shall expect to arrive by the 10th March. My calculations are to visit your neighborhood, and give my girls an opportunity of taking a peep at the Herron pond; this you are aware will be something new for them under the sun. If you should want a pair of horses, have the goodness to call over to Peapack, that I may have the opportunity of supplying you with such a pair as you want. I have some that excel the 'Doctor' horse. If not convenient to call over, let me know by letter the kind you wish and I will fetch them over.

"Yours truly and with much respect,

A handwritten signature in cursive script, appearing to read "Gilbert Vandorn", with a horizontal line underneath it.

"William Vandorn, Esq."

The late Daniel P. Van Dorn, of Freehold, stated that he "visited Gilbert in the West," that he was a "moderate-sized man and prosperous, and at times came East with horses to sell." Gilbert was on the roster of the War of 1812.

His tombstone was seen by the writer in 1890 in the kitchen cellar beside the steps in the old house of his father near Hillsdale, now occupied by Mrs. William Carson, containing this inscription: "Here lies the body of Isaac, son of Jacob and Mary Vandorn, who departed this life October the 5th Anno Domini, one thousand seven hundred forty-nine aged ten years three months and eleven days." The reason for this tombstone being in the cellar is not known.

1075. ISAAC VAN DOREN, of Neshanic, N. J., s. of Christian (447), b., at Middlebush, N. J., Nov. 12, 1744; d. Dec. 25, 1828; m. (about) 1773, Sarah Opie, who was b. Jan. 17, 1755, and d. Jan. 20, 1835. He became a miller at Neshanic, purchasing on May 1, 1800 of John Van Dike and Thomas Blackwell 29 acres of land with mill pond and grist mill for £650. He joined the Neshanic church May 21, 1825, and perhaps is the same Isaac who rented a pew in the Flemington church in 1811. He is probably also the same who was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, his record being as follows:

"Commissioned ensign in Captain Philip Fulkerson's Company, Second Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia, 1777; ensign, Captain Jacob Ten Eyck's Company, First Battalion, Somerset County, New Jersey, Militia; stationed at Springfield, New Jersey, under Colonel John Taylor, June 18 to 26, 1780; at battle of Springfield, New Jersey, June 23, 1780." He d. without a will.

1076. ISAAC VAN DORN, of Middletown, N. J., s. of Jacob (1128), b., near Hillsdale, N. J., Mar. 11, 1752; d. May 7, 1831; m., July 3, 1784, Anne Couwenhoven (dau. of Garret Couwenhoven and Eleanor Schenck), who was b. May 11, 1754, and d. June 11, 1843, aged 89 years. He was a farmer who was known in his later life as Captain Isaac Van Dorn. He rendered service in the Revolutionary War, when he became a sergeant. His widow became a pensioner of the government after his death, because of those Revolutionary services, and from the pension records we learn that these services were as follows:

"Private, Captain John Smock's Company, First Regiment, Monmouth County New Jersey Militia; enlisted March 15, 1776, and served alternate monthly tours until December, 1776; Private, Captain Benjamin Randolph's Troop of Light Horse, Monmouth County New Jersey Militia, April 1777; Private, Captain James Green's Troop of Light Horse, Monmouth County New Jersey Militia, August, 1777, and served two months; served Congress from Bristol to Reading, Pennsylvania, date unknown; Private, Captain William Remsen's Troop of Light Horse, Monmouth County New Jersey Militia, October, 1777; troop was afterward commanded by Captain Jacob Covenhoven and Captain Lieutenant Barnes Smock in 1778; was Sergeant of Troop at battle of Monmouth, New Jersey, June 28, 1778; served to the end of the war."

• Isaac was the owner of several hundred acres of land at Middletown village. When the English army marched through that village at the Battle of Monmouth, Isaac Van Dorn's buildings were burned, but no others, as he was the only patriot who then resided in the village. It is stated of him that he "played the violin and was fond of music and dancing." Isaac and his wife and children were buried in Christ church cemetery, Middletown, where they have tombstones. He d. intestate, and letters of administration on his estate were granted to his son, Garret, May 27, 1831. He then owned 102 acres of land "adjoining the church lot," at Middletown.

An excellent portrait of his wife, Anne, is in the possession of Jacob Dey Conover, of Middletown.

1077. ISAAC VAN DOREN, of Somerset Co., N. J., s. of Abraham (18), b. Nov. 14, 1752; d. (before) 1794, because not mentioned in father's will of that date. No further trace.

1078. ISAAC VAN DOREN, clergyman and teacher, s. of Abraham (19), b. at Griggstown, N. J., July 9, 1773, d., at Perth Amboy, N. J., Aug. 12, 1864; m., Feb. 10, 1800, Abigail Foster Halsey (dau. of Luther Halsey), who was b. Nov. 4, 1782, and d. 1872. He graduated from Princeton College in 1793, studied divinity with Drs. Romaine and Livingston, and began a pastorate in Hopewell, N. Y., in 1802, remaining there for twenty-three years, during which period he was there blessed with great revivals. In consequence of want of financial support sufficient to care for his growing family he left Hopewell in 1825, and opened the "Newark Institute for Young Ladies," in Newark, N. J., he and his son, John Livingston, being principals of the school. A pamphlet of 1826 in the writer's possession contains a strong approval of this institute by Theodore Frelinghuysen and others. He subsequently, in 1829, in connection with the same son, established a Collegiate Institute in Brooklyn, N. Y.; from there he removed to Lexington, Ky., in 1834, where he remained four years, and is said to have instructed some 1500 pupils. He then taught an academy at Warsaw, Ky., 1839-'40; took charge of a mission church at Iron Mountain, Mo., 1840-'44, subsequent to which he spent his last years usefully and happily with his children.

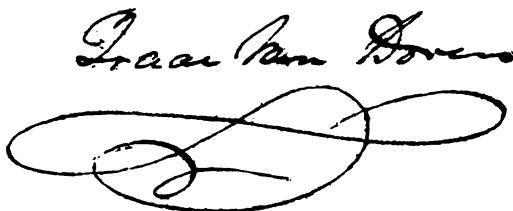

When he died in 1864, at the age of ninety-one, he left, besides his aged widow, nine children, thirty-two grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren: fifty-two living descendants. In his later days he always went by the name of Uncle Isaac; "was eminently social and given to hospitality, the gifted counselor of young clergymen, and of all who applied to him for advice."

His wife, Abigail F. Halsey, known so well as Aunt Abby, lived also to be ninety, and was a remarkably intelligent and interesting woman. Both are buried at New Brunswick, N. J., and on their tall, marble tombstone is inscribed this sentence: "On earth pilgrims; in glory conquerors." Many of their children and grandchildren were greatly distinguished.

One of Mrs. Van Doren's brothers was the Rev. Abraham O. Halsey of Philadelphia. Her father, Luther Halsey, was for seven years an officer in the Revolutionary War, and an adjutant-general under Washington. When she married Rev. Isaac Van Doren, "she put off mourning for General Washington to don the bridal costume." The Halsey family descends from Thomas Halsey, of London, b. 1592, who went to Lynn, Mass., in 1637. (See "Halsey Genealogy," published at Morristown, N. J.).

Though driving four miles he was never known to be late at church, and in five years was absent only three times. He was largely instrumental in clearing the church from debt. Industrious, economical and honest he had great practicable wisdom.

1129. JACOB VAN DOREN, of Bedminster, N. J., s. of Christian (447), b. Dec. 9, 1724; d. Sept. 12, 1811; m. (1), about 1756, Phebe Vanderveer (dau. of Jacob Vanderveer, and sister to Dr. Lawrence Vanderveer of Roycefield), who d. June 6, 1782, aged 45 years; and (2) Jane Ditmars (dau. of Rem Ditmars of Millstone), who d. Dec. 12, 1804, in her 53rd year. He seems to have gone under the name of "Colonel Jacob." About the year 1760 he purchased 285 acres of land of William Axtell near Bedminster, and resided thereon during his life. His son, Jacob, sold this farm about 1815 to Capt. Joseph Nevius. According to the Bedminster twp. tax list of 1787, he was taxed on 240 acres. On June 10, 1800, he, with Jacobus and Henry Vanderveer, purchased 200 acres in Bernards twsp., of Gertrude Parker, executrix of James Parker, being part of the original place of the Earl of Stirling. On Apr. 2, 1805, he purchased 130 acres in Bernards twsp. of Jonathan Compton. On Apr. 14, 1807, he conveyed 208½ acres in Bernards to his son, Jacob, Jr.

Jacob's will, dated Sept. 12, 1810, and probated Sept. 27, 1811 (Somerset Co. Wills, Book A, p. 314), bequeathed: (1) To son John, bed, etc. (2) To daughters, "Lane" and Mary, furniture, etc. (3) To, son, Jacob, $250. (4) To daughter, Phebe Lewis, $700 (late husband, Samuel Lewis, deceased). (6) Residue of estate to four daughters: "Aully" Logan, Elizabeth Annin, "Lane" Van Doren and Mary Van Doren. (7) Executors to lease out Jonathan Compton farm and pay proceeds to son, John. (8) If John marries and has issue, to have interest in the Compton farm, etc. The executors were his son, Jacob, and his son-in-law, John Annin.

1130. JACOB VAN DORN, s. of Jacob (1128), b., near Hillsdale, N. J., Jan. 15, 1731; d. Oct. 19, 1761; unmarried. He wrote his name as follows:

Jacob Vandorn junior,

1131. JACOB VAN DORN, of near Hillsdale, N. J., s. of Aure (264), bap. at Marlborough, N. J., Jan. 1, 1734; d. Sept. 9, 1785, in his 53rd year; unmarried. His tombstone states that he was aged 52 years, nine months and nine days, which would make his date of birth Jan. 1, 1733. He probably resided on the homestead of his father. According to a lease of 1756 (see p. 73) he was a miner at one time, endeavoring to develop the tract of land containing some minerals in Somerset Co. Jacob, with the shrewdness of the Jacob of old, became wealthy through his mill and farm. The inventory of his personality alone at his death amounted to £7510. 10. 7½.

His will, dated Sept. 7, 1785 and proved Sept. 26, 1785, (Trenton Wills, Book 27, p. 146), bequeathed: (1) To his mother, use of one-half of his farm, etc., and interest of £700. At her decease same to go to her sister's children. (2) To nephew John Covenhoven, his "home place with all the lots adjoining," on conditions. (3) To Benjamin and Aurie Van Mater his "place at Colt's Neck, which formerly belonged to Lewis Dennice, with all the rest of my lands at Colt's Neck," and various other lots named. (4) To Barns Smock, son of his sister Nelly Smock, "the farm his father now lives on, known by the name, formerly, of the farm of Joseph Taylor," with conditions (in which are named his eldest sister "Anney," and his youngest sister, who is not named). (5) To two of his executors, John and Jacob Covenhoven, £1,200 to be put at interest; interest on £700 for use of his mother; and £500 for use of his sister, Nelly Smock. The executors were John and Jacob Covenhoven, Benjamin Van Mater and Barns Smock. Jacob wrote his name as follows:

1132. JACOB VAN DOREN, of Sand Beach, Cayuga Co., N. Y., s. of Abraham (18), b. at Middlebush, N. J., Aug. 27, 1745; date of death unknown; m. perhaps (1) Jane Voorhees; and (2), Jan. 7, 1783, at Marlborough, N. J., Ann Nicholas, who was b. at Middlebush, Oct. 25, 1750, and d. at Sand Beach, May 20, 1854, aged 103 years, 6 months and 25 days.

The remarkable age of Jacob's last wife called forth the following newspaper notice at the time of her death: "At the commencement of the Revolutionary War, Mrs. Van Doren resided in New Jersey with her husband and two children." (An error as she was married in 1783). "During these troublous times she had opportunities to see much of our army; and the honor of acquaintance with General Washington and his wife. Within the last three years, the writer has heard her speak of them both in terms of high admiration and respect. She removed with her family to the foot of Owasco Lake in 1800, when she was fifty years old, and continued to reside there till her decease. At the date of her settlement in this State, central New York was almost an unbroken wilderness. She reared a family of ten children; two sons and eight daughters, and to this she added the care of five half-orphan grand-children. Her eldest child if now living, would have been nearly eighty-four years old. Of her twenty-seven grandchildren, sixteen survive her. Of forty-nine great-grandchildren twenty-five are living, and she left three great-great-grandchildren. Her oldest grand-child, if living, would have been fifty-five years old, and the oldest now alive is fifty-three. She had been confined to her bed for some three years previous to her death but retained her reason until she died. In the year 1816 she made a public profession of her faith in Christ in the Reformed Dutch Church. After her sight had become so dim that she could not read, she could repeat large portions of the Scriptures and many Psalms and Hymns, and experienced the benefit and comfort of having a large store of divine truth in her memory. Her piety was not of the most joyous kind, but no one could doubt of her preparation to depart and be with Christ. Her mind seemed of late years to be mostly occupied with thoughts of death and eternity."

Jacob served as a private in the Revolutionary War in either Capt. Jacob Ten Eyck's Co., or in Capt. John Sebring's Co., 1st Battalion, Somerset Co., Militia (as per Trenton records).

The daughters of Jacob I have not been able to trace in any instance. It seems singular that so large a family should have disappeared from all knowledge of the family of Tunis (2150), whose descendants are all I have been able to secure. (See Appendix VIII).

There is on file in Trenton a marriage bond of license of Jacob Van Doren to "Jenney Voorhees" dated Apr. 5, 1769, and I suppose this to be the above named Jacob. On this supposition I have made Ann Nicholas to be his second wife, and divide the children, as to parentage, as below; but this division is not certain. On this bond Jacob's signature is as follows:

1133. JACOB VAN DORN, of Roxbury, (now Chester) twsp., Morris co., N. J., s. of John (1268), b. (about) 1759; d. (before) 1812. I suppose him to have been the same Jacob who m., Aug. 29, 1779, Mary Duer. It is also possible that he again m. Anna J. —— who, as Anna J. Van Dorn, was b. June 28, 1765, and d. Dec. 11, 1841, at Pataskala, O., where she is buried, her tombstone reading "Anna J. Van Dorn." The supposition as to his second wife is based solely upon the assumption that this Jacob was the father of Ralph (1943) and Isaac (1082), who lived at Pataskala, O., and whose father's name was Jacob. If Jacob married a second time his wife must have gone to Ohio with her sons, Ralph and Isaac, about or before 1820. Possibly Jacob went there also, as there is an undecipherable tombstone at Pataskala next to that of Anna J. Van Dorn. (See further remarks under Ralph, 1943).

There was a Jacob Van Dorn who repaired the court house at Somerville, N. J., in 1800, together with Aaron (2), and he may be this Jacob, as he was Aaron's nephew. Jacob seems to have been in his lifetime the owner of 130 acres of land between Peapack, N. J., and the Black river, adjoining land of Aaron Van Dorn, William Irvine and others.

1134. JACOB VAN DOREN, farmer, of Bedminster, N. J., and Shepherdstown, W. Va., s. of Jacob (1129), b., at Bedminster, May 4, 1760; d., at Allendale near Shepherdstown, Aug. 25, 1824; m., Apr. 3, 1781, Maria Melick, who was b. Jan. 21, 1761, and d. Dec. 10, 1823. He went in his later years by the name of "Captain Van Doren." In 1787 he was taxed on 240 acres of land in Bedminster, N. J. All of his ch., with the possible exception of Jacob, were b. at Bedminster. A letter from his son, Jacob (1142), written in 1859, states that the father, Jacob, went to Virginia in the year in which the son Jacob was born; this would fix the date of migration as 1794. In this letter Jacob, Jr., states his personal recollection of seeing five of his uncles, namely: John, Abram, Peter, Isaac and Joseph, and of them he said: "All of them were fine looking old gentlemen." Jacob must have returned to Bedminster, N. J., for on Apr. 14, 1807, his father conveyed to him 208½ acres of land near Bedminster church. Jacob sold it about 1814; it is said to be the land now in the possession of Robert Nevius. Some of his children married in Bedminster. Sometime after 1814 Jacob returned to Virginia, where he was a large land-owner near Shepherdstown (now West Virginia). He called his estate "Allendale," but, besides the land he occupied, he is said to have owned much other land in the vicinity. "Allendale" was located about four miles from Shepherdstown.

Jacob served as a private in the Somerset Co. N. J. Militia during the Revolutionary War, but it is not certain whether he was in Capt. Jacob Ten Eyck's company, or Capt. John Sebring's company, or in still another company, as there are three separate records of a Jacob as a private in a Somerset Co. Militia, and the identity is indistinguishable.

The ch. named below are all whom I have record, but there is said to have been another daughter, who married and had a family. About 1906 a Robert Duncan, of New Orleans and San Francisco, called upon William Van Dorn (2216), of Basking Ridge, N. J., and stated that his mother was a daughter of Jacob Van Doren, and he was trying to learn something about the family. He was probably a son of the unknown daughter just referred to.

Jacob's house, of "Allendale," known as the "Yellow House" was still standing a few years ago. Jacob was buried in a graveyard on his own estate.

Jacob is said to have been sent to Princeton College for a time. In 1787 he was taxed on 80 acres of land in Bedminster twsp. The house of his father William, in which Jacob lived, is said to have burned down when the family were at church. (See under his father, William, 2191). Colonel Stephen Hunt, father-in-law of Jacob, was a Colonel of the First Battalion of N. J. troops in the Revolutionary army, and a noted man in his day.

1136. JACOB VAN DOREN, miller of Ariesville, Schoharie Co., N. Y., s. of Aaron (2), b. Apr. 6, 1766; d. July 13, 1852. He was m., but his wife d. without issue, and her name is unknown. He lived as a young man with his father at Peapack, N. J., but in early life went to Cincinnati, O., where his father had located 1,000 acres of land. He was driven off from that locality by the Indians, being the only one of a party who was not killed.

I have seen a letter (undated) sent from that place by John (?) Gaston directed to Jacob in New Jersey, in which the writer says: "The Indians have not been troublesome in our settlement this season. . . . There appears a great difficulty respecting locations made in the Fourth Range and farther out as the Judge's deed does not extend farther than the middle of the Fourth Range. . . . I believe your section that you have located is out of the Judge's deed. . . . I think it is necessary for you to see to it; in my opinion likewise the warrant that you have not yet paid. I wish to know if your father would incline to sell it."

His nephew, the late Lewis Van Dorn (1488), of Peapack, once said of him: "He was a very bright man, and an ingenious one. I have heard him say that he manufactured and barreled the first barrel of flour that went to Albany."

As was stated in connection with Aaron, father of Jacob, Aaron had purchased large tracts of land of Judge John Cloves Symmes, afterwards father-in-law of Gen. William H. Harrison, in the then-called "North West Territories," and went on horseback to locate the land, which was where the city of Cincinnati now stands, and north of it. On his return he offered any of his sons 1,000 acres of it if they would settle upon it. Jacob accepted the offer, took the Cincinnati tract, and went on it about the year 1786. There was a blockhouse near the tract, called "Fort Washington." According to the account of a relative, "Jacob, with two young men, went to work, and one day while hoeing the corn, the Indians crept up, fired on them, killing one of the party. The others outran the savages and escaped into the fort. Jacob was so much disgusted at such conduct that he sold his land for $5 and a silver watch, saying he would not stay there to be shot at by Indians! He then started on foot and alone for Jersey, and, after many hardships and narrow escapes from the Indians, and nearly starved, he reached home, to be reproached by his mother, she saying: 'Ah, Jacob, I am afraid I shall see you carrying the pillow-case to mill,' referring to a custom of poor people who went to the mill on foot with a pillow-case to hold the few pounds of flour or meal they could afford to buy. But she was mistaken. Jacob went to New York and settled in the Mohawk Valley in Schoharie Co. his mill there being located at Ariesville, on Schoharie Creek. When he died he owned a fine property in land and mills." Exactly where he died I have not ascertained; the Schoharie records not showing a will, nor administration on his estate.

1137. JACOB VAN DOREN, of near Pluckemin, N. J., s. of William (2190), b. Dec. 11, 1767; was living in 1807; probably never married.

1138. JACOB VAN DOREN, merchant, farmer and miller, of Griggstown and Raritan, N. J., s. of Abraham (19), b. at Griggstown, Apr. 9, 1778; d. at Raritan, Nov., 1833; m. (1) Maria Boyd (dau. of Rev. William Boyd and Catherine Taylor, of Lamington, N. J.), who d. Dec. 23, 1812; and (2) Petronella Veghte (dau. of Rynier Veghte), who was b. (about) 1775, and d. Apr. 27, 1857. Jacob purchased his land near the present town of Raritan about 1815, but had previously located on his birthplace at Griggstown, where he owned about 101 acres of land. He also in 1811, purchased there 58 acres from his brother, Abraham. While resident at Griggstown he built an unusually large and handsome house, adjoining the house of his brother Abraham, and which in its day was called by his neighbor's "Van Doren's Folly," because of its excessive size. This house is now in ruins, but still shows some fine mantel-pieces. It is said that he wanted to outshine his brother, Abraham, when he constructed this fine mansion. The large farm he owned at Raritan was purchased from various parties in 1816, and later, and the place he occupied there is now owned by the Frederick Cornell estate, and lies on the Raritan river, midway between Raritan and Somerville. The house remains as it was when occupied by him.

Jacob's will, dated Nov. 22, 1833, probated Jan. 22, 1834 (Somerset Co. Wills, Book D., p. 352), bequeathed: (1) To his wife "Petro Nella" silver marked with her name. (2) To his son, John Boyd, some silverware. (3) To his wife, and to children Aletta, Sophia, and John Boyd, all the residue of his property, provided they pay to "my eldest daughters, Maria, wife of James Van Deventer, and Eliza, wife of Dr. Peter D. Vroom, $2,000 after five years." (4) Servants to be sold. The executors were Rynier Veghte, his brother-in-law, and James Van Deventer.

Jacob Van Doren was a man of wealth and influence who, like his father, went by the name of "Captain Van Doren." He either went to Virginia with his father in 1794, the year in which he was born, or more likely, was born that same year after the arrival of his parents in Virginia. Returning later with his parents to New Jersey he there married, and after his marriage returned with his wife and father, and perhaps others of the family, to Virginia. Jacob was a member of the Board of Justices of Berkeley co., and under the Constitution then in force in Virginia, which made the senior member of the board the clerk of the county, he was county clerk, holding the office until this law was repealed. He resided at first in the "yellow house" of his father until after his marriage, when he built a new residence still known as "Allendale," both his father's house and his own being on the same estate. Jacob was buried in the family burying-ground at "Allendale," beside his first wife.

Jacob's granddaughter, Helen Magruder, of Washington, D. C., says: "My grandfather, Jacob, used to sing to us, his grandchildren, the Holland cradle song, 'Trip a trop a tronjes.'"

The Eoff family of Pluckemin into which Jacob married was an interesting one. Christian Eoff, Jacob's father-in-law, was the hotel keeper at Pluckemin, and many anecdotes are related of him. He was one of the most noted characters of the vicinity. (For some of these anecdotes see "Our Home," p. 42). Christian Eoff was the only son of Jacob Eoff and Maria Tiepel (Teeple), and Christian's children were: Anne, Mary, Catherine, Jacob, and the Rachel who m. Jacob Van Doren. On Christian Eoff's farm the "Battle of Pluckemin" was fought.

The "Whitehouse Review," in one of its issues, contained the following, which is of interest: "Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Van Doren, who reside near this place, own a number of relics of great value. The lot includes a deed written on a piece of sheepskin and dated the thirteenth year of the reign of George III, the 17th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-three; two arm chairs, said to have been used by British soldiers during the Revolution; a sheepskin pocketbook; some queer currency; a Confederate $5 note; a strange article, resembling a rolling pin, supposed to have been used by the Indians to crack maize, bearing these words: 'This stone was found in the woods south of Clinton, Hunterdon county, N. He has been all his life a most energetic and successful man in business. His mother being a relative of the late Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. Van Doren was a frequent visitor in the Commodore's New York home, and was always welcomed. When young he left Neshanic, and, after being in various businesses in N. Y. City, he visited Europe (in 1844, prior to his marriage), where he saw Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, and also the present King Edward, who was then Prince of Wales. His wife was the niece of Henry Bell, the first man to run a steamboat on the Clyde, and whose monument is now a conspicuous figure on that river near Greenock. After his marriage he conducted an oil business, at 57 Dey St., N. Y. City, for about eighteen years, dealing in sperm oil, and making large purchases from the whaling vessels. Petroleum then came to the front, and he closed out the business, which had been very prosperous. After a brief period of retirement, he opened, in 1863, a clothing house in Elizabeth, conducting it until 1880, when he retired from business. He is to-day the oldest member of the Masonic Fraternity in Elizabeth, having been elected "Dean" of the Washington Lodge, No. 33, quite recently. He became a Mason in 1854. He became a resident of Elizabeth in 1846, 1267. JOHN VAN DOREN, farmer, of Millstone, N. J., s. of Christian (447), b., at Middlebush, N. J., Apr. 23, 1726; d. 1815; m. (about) 1749, Martha Lott, who was b. (about) 1728, and d. Apr. 27, 1805. Martha Lott appears on the records as "Marretye" and "Matilda." On Dec. 12, 1755, John purchased of his father, Christian, for a nominal price, 246 acres of land on the south side of the Amwell Road at Millstone, where he resided during his life. Christian had purchased this land of William Plumsted May 1, 1752. His descendant, Jacob (1155) still owns part of it. In 1767 he gave land for the erection of the Millstone church, but the church, preferring a different site, exchanged it for land of John Smock. Mr. Van Doren was one of the trustees of the new church, and was instrumental in its formation. Besides contributing land he gave £14 for the building of the church, and in 1777 he gave £15 for the erection of a parsonage. On Apr. 17, 1773, he purchased 432 acres of land near Whitehouse, Hunterdon Co., N. J., from the estate of Johannes Schenck; consideration, £1083. 4s. The deed was never recorded. It subsequently came into the possession of his son, Abraham, and, later, 82 acres of it was in the possession of Abraham's son, Joseph, in whose hands the author saw the deed some years ago.

John Van Doren is said to have been a very "droll" man. His house, which still stands, was the scene of some of the events of the Revolutionary War. In this house General Washington often slept, when passing in or through New Jersey. On this farm the Hessians, after clearing off a large piece of woodland, established a hospital for wounded and sick soldiers. At one time during the war Mrs. Van Doren was taken prisoner by the British troops, and she was hung up by the heels and was ordered to disclose certain facts relative to the American soldiers; the attempt was unsuccessful and she was released, but it is said not until she was black in the face.

"In Mr. Van Doren's meadow, Washington's army encamped one-night in the winter of 1777, and the next morning they marched from it to the Sourland Mountains on a ruse. At sunrise the British scouts, on the plains below saw the columns of American militia on the Sourlands, appearing and reappearing among the trees, and so interminable did the line seem that it appeared to them as if they must have re-enforced themselves. In truth the head followed the tail of the column around, and only a company or two were there. The rest had retreated toward Morristown, and this covered the retreat, for the British, afraid, retired to New Brunswick. It is one of Washington's famous retreats. During one of the raids that occurred at this time the British came to Mr. Van Doren's house, and among other things carried off the tea-kettle. A granddaughter, living in the family, thought it a shame that her grandmother should be deprived of her favorite beverage, and so went to her father's house and got another kettle. In a short time the rascals took this also. The intrepid girl determined to recover the stolen article, so she went more than a mile after it and got it."—(From "Somerset Past and Present" in "Somerset Unionist," 1870.)

The Van Doren house is so notable a landmark of Revolutionary days, that it has been photographed and appears in the illustration on the opposite page. A picture of the house and a notice of the quartering of Gen. Washington and staff there in January, 1777, after the Battle of Princeton, is given in Stryker's "Battles of Monmouth and Princeton," p. 301. There is a medalion portrait of Washington, cast in iron, in the old fire-place of the mansion.

Mr. Van Doren's will, dated Sept. 18, 1811, probated Nov. 2, 1815 (Book B, Somerset Co. Wills, p. 115), bequeathed: (1) To his son Jacob a "part of my homestead farm," excepting "the house and lot which my son William now occupies." (2) To his son William the other part, and also house and lot above. (3) Jacob to pay $3,000, viz.: $500 to his son Abraham, $500 to his son John, and $500 to his daughter Altie, in successive years, and then to repeat the payments. (4) His son William to pay $2,000, viz.: $500 to son Christianus, and $500 to son Cornelius in successive years and then to repeat. (5) To his son William $300; and to Jacob certain items. (6) To his sons Abraham, Christianus, John, Jacob and William, $250 each, "which said sums amount to $1,250, which is to the amount of my blacks which I have sold and still own." The clause recites that Cornelius and Altie "have each had a black and they have acknowledged to be therewith satisfied." (7) Rest of estate to six sons, but "William and his family shall have the use of the apples out of the orchard in front of my house for the term of seven years," and "Jacob shall pay the expenses of my funeral and him to have the crop he may have put in ground at my decease." The executors were his sons Abraham and John, and his friend, Martin Schenck, of Millstone.

1268. JOHN VAN DORN, of Roxbury (now Chester) twsp., Morris Co., N. J., s. of Jacob (1128), b., near Hillsdale, N. J., Jan. 6, 1733; d. (see statement below); m. (license dated June 30, 1756) Agnate Schenck, dau. of Roelof Schenck and Engeltje Van Dorn (750), who was his cousin. The surety on his marriage license bond on file in Trenton was "Abraham Emans." Mr. Van Dorn removed to near Peapack, N. J., about 1755, for on May 3 of that year he purchased of William Skinner and others, executors of Dr. John Johnston, two tracts of land, the one known as Lot 11, and the other Lot 10, supposed to contain 228½ acres. On Apr. 14, 1764, he purchased from Richard McDonald, carpenter, and Margaret, his wife, for the consideration of £703, 138½ acres in Bedminster twsp., Somerset co., adjoining Lawrence's brook, and also 9½ acres in Roxbury twsp., Morris co. (Deeds in Secretary of State's office, Trenton, B-3, p. 54.) On Aug. 1, 1767, it was found by a survey that the land purchased of Johnston's executors contained only about 207½ acres, and an agreement was entered into between him and James Parker of Perth Amboy, by which the boundary lines were straightened. (See Trenton Deeds, Book E-3, p. 166.)

On May 30, 1765, he advertised in the Pennsylvania "Gazette" for a runaway "Mulattoe Fellow, named Tom, about 30 years of age," who "has one extraordinary mark, having no Toes on either of his Feet." He offered £10 reward for his return. Evidently his house was burned down by his slave in 1766, for, in the New York "Journal," of Oct. 16 of that year, Sheriff Jacob Ford, Jr., of Morris Co., offered a similar reward for "a Negro Man Tony, the servant of John Van Dorin, who lately burnt his master's house," and who had broken jail and escaped. Tony was recaptured, but again broke jail, whereupon the sheriff re-advertised for him in the same newspaper, on Dec. 4, 1766, where his master's correct name is given as "John Van Dorn."

That John died prior to 1778 would seem to appear from the fact that his father in his will of that year mentions his children, and not John himself. Nevertheless, in 1805, an Ann Van Dorn, with John Haas, took out letters of administration on the estate of a John Van Dorn (presumed to be he), and sold his realty in 1815 and 1819 at public sale (as per Morris Co. Surrogate's office records). I assume the Ann named was his daughter. If so, John may have lived until after 1800. I give the children below as I have been able to obtain them, although it is stated he also had sons, William and Roelof, but these I have not been able to confirm. His signature was as follows:

A handwritten signature in cursive script, appearing to read "John Vandorn". The signature is fluid and somewhat stylized, with "John" on the top line and "Vandorn" on the bottom line.

May 29, 1837. He was a soldier of the Revolutionary War, his record being as follows: "Private, Captain Coonrad Ten Eyck's Company, Second Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia; Private, Captain Cornelius Lott's Company, Second Battalion, Somerset County New Jersey Militia; at battle of Monmouth, New Jersey, June 28, 1778, where taken prisoner, and confined in New York City for some time." In 1781 he became a member of the Millstone church, and was elected deacon in 1785, 1790 and 1794, and an elder in 1798, 1807, 1814, 1815 and 1818. In 1807 he purchased of Daniel Perrine and others 212 acres on the east side of the Millstone river for $9,700. In his later days he resided on the present distillery farm at Millstone. He was not only a farmer, but also by trade a weaver.

His second wife, Nellie, made a will Aug. 13, 1833, probated June 20, 1837 (Somerset Co. Wills, Book E, p. 164), in which she then speaks of her "daughter-in-law, Elizabeth Van Doren, widow;" her daughter, Aletta Van Duyn; and her daughter, Catherine Van Northwick, who had then two children.

His property adjoined that of the Millstone church parsonage property (which latter was sold by him for parsonage purposes in 1851), and was a portion of the same land which his great-grandfather Christian had given to his son John for a nominal sum, and, therefore, has been in the family for 156 years, it being now owned by Jacob (1155). Mr. Van Doren was a remarkably hardy man, frequently going about without a coat even in the coldest weather, and he did not cease hard work upon his farm until he became eighty-four. One of his treasures was his grandfather's old clock, made in New Brunswick long before the Revolution, and which stood in the same house during all those trying days when the British imprisoned his grandmother, and when General Washington later made free use of his house and lands. He was a modest farmer and citizen. (See further remarks under John, 1267).

My employer's business in Princeton was building boats and boating stuff from Pennsylvania—grain, pork, etc. From thence I went to Pennsylvania, near Newtown; thence to New York, about 1840, as clerk for the firm of Davison, Van Pelt & Co., 45 Cedar St., drygoods jobbers. After three years I became a partner in the firm of Crum, Duychinck & Van Doren. In 1849 I first bought this farm, consisting of 154 acres. Have lived here ever since." frame and great physical power. The "Christian Intelligencer," upon his death, said: "He was, previous to the sickness (above alluded to), a powerful preacher. He sailed in January, 1865, in a sailing vessel for Amoy, China, arriving there five months later, and remaining until May, 1868, when he returned to America and for two years visited the churches of his denomination to interest them in his work. In Oct., 1870, he again went to Amoy, taking his sister, Helen M. (987), with him, remaining until 1873, when, broken in health, he was compelled to return finally to America. While in China he was the author of a mental arithmetic in the Amoy colloquial. His subsequent American charges were: Cato, N. Y., 1874-'76; Tyre, N. Y., 1876-'82; Gallupville, N. After his death his daughter, Alice B., (144), went as a missionary to India, her widowed mother accompanying her. His church at Bath-on-Hudson erected after his death a memorial tablet, placing it to the left of the pulpit. It is ecclesiastical in shape, having at the top a large cross, deeply cut into the marble, under which is the sentence "Until the day break." A Greek cross is under this motto, and this inscription follows: "Rev. J. Howard Van Doren, first pastor of this church, under whose efforts this building was erected. In loving remembrance by a grateful congregation."

Joseph "was a man famous for his muscular power, and had few equals in farming. He presented the congregation of Middlebush with an acre of land upon which the church was erected, and in the labor he personally bestowed upon the building excelled all the other workmen." (Judge Ralph Voorhees in "Our Home.") After the death of Elizabeth, Joseph's wife, her sister, Adeline Wyckoff, who was blind from sixteen years of age and who delighted herself by writing verses, usually of a pious nature, composed a poem of 119 verses upon the death of Elizabeth, beginning as follows:

"Died July nineteenth, '24,
Elizabeth Van Doren,
Thirty and seven her age and year
When carried to the tomb.

"'Twas three long years did she declare Consumptive she had been
In Jersey New, near Brunswick, too
Her residence was seen."

The verses are curious, to say the least.

Joseph's will, of Jan. 6, 1863, was probated Dec. 6, 1865. The will of his wife, Sarah C., dated Sept. 27, 1853, was probated Nov. 11, 1854.

"Mr. Van Doren was the larger man, and, during the affray, Oram drew a five-barreled revolver and fired two shots, one of which pierced Mr. Van Doren's heart." The "Sun" added that "Mr. Van Doren was highly esteemed, having held a prominent position in political circles, and was a large, fine-looking man. Mr. Oram was about thirty-two years of age." From a relative it is learned that Mr. Oram had formerly been a clerk in Mr. Van Doren's office and had conceived himself aggrieved, but that his reasons were entirely frivolous.

Mr. Van Doren has led quite an eventful life, and is still unusually vigorous. When he was married in 1854 he drove from Washington to Mauch Chunk for his bride, returning with her, making a trip of 150 miles by carriage. During the War Mr. Van Doren acted as Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue for four years, and in earlier life was township clerk, before Washington was incorporated. He once had a cigar factory. It is said of him that, in consequence of a vow made in 1856, when John C. Fremont was running for president, that he would not shave until

By inadvertence, this name was omitted from its proper place (No. 1184) until it was too late to insert the full particulars there without destroying the value of the cross-references to his number, 1426.

Fremont was elected; he has since worn a full beard. He is a great pedestrian; in 1902 walking to Wilkesbarre, a distance of 90 miles, in two days, and frequently making similar, though shorter, trips. Always in perfect health, he never found need for a physician. His keen eye and mind for detecting fraudulent doers when he was in the internal revenue business gave him the soubriquet of "Hawk-Eye," which has ever since clung to him. When seventy-two years of age he was still making daily trips to New York, leaving home at five o'clock in the morning. In many ways he has been a remarkable man.
